Erosion of rights

Dear Editor:

Practically all of Carmel is built. Most of the parcels are standard 40 X 100 square foot lots as originally laid out when the village was founded.

If the city wishes to preserve large parcels then it should be required to purchase these parcels subject to owners consent and the owners price, rather than penalize home owners with large parcels. Over the years owners of more than one 40 X 100 square foot lots per parcel have paid more initially when acquired and they have paid more taxes since that time.

Why penalize these people after everyone else (practically) has divided their parcels? (Like closing the barn door after the horse is out.)

It is apparent that the city is attempting to: 1) Discriminate against homeowners with more than one lot. 2) Devalue owners property. 3) Exceed its authority (since owners deeds already state specific lots by numbers, etc.). 4) Take away rights of ownership that were present when owners purchased their property.

This erosion of property rights and the altering of long existing standards is unacceptable.

By placing more restrictions on what homeowners may or may not do with their own property — the city is not only being discriminatory but it is losing credibility as a public entity.

If the city officials place additional restrictions on homeowners they may alienate the very people they supposedly are trying to protect.

Townsend and Woolworth

Dear Editor:

One of the characteristics of current society, sadly not unlike dying Rome in biblical times, is the development of the superstar in entertainment and athletics. These people inhabit a heady atmosphere, primed by the money paid them and the power it tends to provide. Such circumstances are fertile for the growth of hubris, a notion that one is somehow inherently more than other mortals.

Is it that our neighbor, chafing under the denial of his building plans, decided that it was time the little village of Carmel learned who he really is?

And would our resident villagers really want to attend a campaign rally "by invitation only"?

On her record, Charlotte Townsend has performed creditably for the City of Carmel, she deserves re-election and we surely need her far more than the superstar, or, for that matter, the T-shirt merchant.

Further, one whom we truly need is Anne Woolworth, an intelligent former city planner who always does her homework and gives the job a total effort.

These two ladies merit your vote.

Clint for Mayor

THIS IS the hardest thing I've had to do as a journalist. But it's also the easiest.

It's hard because the city of Carmel is approaching a crucial crossroads to its future in the municipal election April 8. Who the voters pick will have a profound effect on the future of this village. It may, in fact, be the most important election in the city's 70-year history. Not only the city of Carmel, but the whole world is watching...and waiting.

It's hard because I feel this editorial is the most important and far-reaching one that I've ever had to write, and I dearly want to say and do the right things.

But it's also the easiest because I feel I am saying and doing the right things.

Carmel is rapidly approaching the '90s; the year 2000 is a mere 14 years away. The city of Carmel — despite what a handful of people wish for — is no longer in 1916, or 1929 for that matter. It never will be again.

But Carmel can and should preserve and cherish the best of what it has now while facing the uncertain but inevitable realities of the future.

That doesn't mean solving the problems of today and the future by pretending they don't exist or hoping they will go away by inaction or inattention. Or by neglecting and mistreating an important and integral segment of the community.

Carmel shouldn't have to be dragged kicking and screaming into the 21st Century, but rather be the vanguard — a model community where residents and business community not only co-exist, but complement each other. Striking a true balance between what everybody agrees is — to quote the oft-repeated 1929 preamble, "predominantly a residential city" where "business and commerce are subordinated to its residential character." Subordinated yes, but not subjugated.

With that in mind Carmel needs a dynamic and forceful mayor, one who can be a mayor for all seasons and all people, one who respects and understands the needs of the residential community, is aware and can act on the problems and desires of the business community, but who also has the stature and can command the attention of the "outside" world.

To quote former Carmel City Administrator Hugh Bayless: "The election of one candidate over another has sometimes made little difference in the course of Carmel's 70-year history, but there have been other times where the election of the right candidate has made a tremendous difference."

Carmel has such a candidate running for mayor. A candidate who can bring the community back together, who can bring back a spirit of understanding and cooperation, bring some of the small village attitudes and neighborliness of old Carmel into a new Carmel. A candidate who can make a tremendous difference if the city is to face the future not only with determination and resolve, but hope and confidence.

That candidate is Clint Eastwood.

THERE HAVE been so many unfounded charges flying around this campaign that you'd think Ferdinand Marcos has a hand in this election.

Clint Eastwood is obviously not in this race for money, he's obviously not in it for fame or recognition, nor for any ego gratification. He's also not in this race — as has been so unfairly charged — to open this city up to unchecked development and gross profiteering. What could he possibly hope to gain by contributing to the potential demise of a village that is his home and that he clearly cares for deeply and is willing to contribute his time and effort to preserve and protect?

Clint Eastwood is in this race because he cares.

For a man of his fame and fortune to aspire to a $200-a-month job means he is dedicated to this city and is willing and able to put something back into a community he's lived in for 14 years.

And he has a lot to offer the citizens of Carmel; that is evident by talking to him and listening to his ideas.

Thus the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook strongly recommends Clint Eastwood for Mayor of Carmel.

SINCE THE the mayor is but one vote on the city council and there are two other city council seats up for election this year the Carmel Pine Cone/-Carmel Valley Outlook also recommends two candidates who Clint Eastwood has said himself can and will work with him to bring about a new spirit of understanding and cooperation to the city: Elinor Laiolo and Francis P. "Bob" Fischer.

Laiolo and Fischer are both long-time residents who have amply demonstrated their concern about Carmel and who have the ability and the attitude to make responsible and responsive council members. They deserve a chance to be elected.

One more thing: Many thanks to council candidate Don Lampson for bringing a much-needed sense of humor, earnestness and straight talk to this election. We could use more of that in Carmel.

Now that I've finally said all that and you know where we stand...anyone wants a beer I'll be across the street.

Paul Laub withdraws from mayor's race

By MICHAEL GARDNER

SAYING THAT he wants to present a united front against incumbent Mayor Charlotte Townsend, Paul Laub has withdrawn from the Carmel mayoral race and thrown his support to Clint Eastwood, the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook has learned.

Laub, the most colorful character in this campaign, promises to support Eastwood in his bid to unseat Mayor Townsend April 8.

Laub indicated his withdrawl is effective Thursday, April 3 — just five days before the election.

Laub, owner of a T-shirt shop and two buildings in town, believes that a united effort against Townsend is needed if Eastwood is to win.

"I would very much like to see this town united rather than still thrashing around," Laub explained.

"I have met Mr. Eastwood and have found him to be extremely sincere and he is capable of solving the problems that are currently distressing this town," Laub continued.

Laub pointed out, however, that if any of the candidates have to withdraw, he would resume the campaign.

"If anything happens — let's say Charlotte withdraws — I'm still here," Laub said.

Asked whether Eastwood had forced him into a withdrawal, Laub said, "Nobody's tough enough to do that. That's not the way with me...Mr. Eastwood has never asked me at any time."

Laub said he waited so long to withdraw because he was uncertain of Eastwood's policies and goals.

Eastwood apparently won him over.

"I feel that it is the best for the community and I will ask my supporters to support him...He should be greatly respected and supported in this particular endeavor," Laub said.

As for his campaign funds, Laub said those who contributed to his campaign will get double their money back.

Additionally, Laub promised to pay his volunteers, perhaps through contributions to their favorite charity.

Laub's campaign got off to a controversial start when he moved into town from Carmel Valley just days before the filing deadline.

Since then Laub has presented himself well; painting himself as a candidate of programs who does not necessarily support business expansions.

His campaign was highlighted by humor and the local media swore he would stay up nights dreaming up new quotes, such as "I love Clint Eastwood. He's made an international media star out of me" and, as he turned to Eastwood at a debate, Laub said, "this is the talent portion of the beauty contest."

Council candidates get a rare respite from hoopla

By MICHAEL GARDNER

THERE WAS no superstar to boost gate attendance and perk the media's interest. No Pete Rose, no Bruce Springsteen and no Clint Eastwood. Instead, it was just the guys on the front line; the blockers for the quarterback who do a lot of the work but get none of the headlines.

For the first time this election year the campaign was by and for the citizens of Carmel as candidates for city council — freed from the shadow of Clint Eastwood and his media entourage — were able to spend time talking to residents in the hopes of being elected April 8.

The League of Women Voters of the Monterey Peninsula, which co-sponsored a television debate for the mayoral candidates, provided Carmel with a council-candidates-only forum at Sunset Center March 26.

The council race thus far has taken a backseat to the mayoral spotlight focusing on Eastwood's challenge to incumbent Charlotte Townsend. Also running are Paul Laub and Tim Grady.

But the council results are just as important; there are two vacancies open for four-year terms. The mayor, like each council member, has only one vote.

For the council forum a couple of camera crews showed; the local television stations have tried to maintain a semblence of covering the issues. And the local papers attended, notebooks in hand.

But nowhere could there be found the BBC or the Washington Post; CNN or Time; the Japan Broadcasting Corp. or US magazine.

The audience didn't have to shade their eyes from the glare of the camera lights, poke through still photographers swarming around him, or contend with gawking tourists.

For the some 60 or so residents who showed, the evening provided an opportunity to hear each of the eight council candidates and also ask questions on issues ranging from second kitchens to Mission Ranch to parking.

Armed with the information, residents now will go to the polls April 8 to elect two city council candidates from among the eight hopefuls. The candidates are: incumbents David Maradei and Robert Stephenson, Tom May, Bob Fischer, Don Lampson, Anne Woolworth, Elinor Laiolo and Robert Weber.

Following is a summation of some of the points made by the candidates.

David Maradei

Incumbent Maradei, the Carmel Post Office station manager, said the present council has a "record of positive achievement" based on implementation of the policies and goals of the general plan enacted during his term.

MARADEI PUSHED the long line of council achievements, including the beach restoration project, starting a youth recreation program and revamping of city hall.

Projects close to development include the library expansion and pubiic restrooms at Devendorf Park.

"We should change and we will change. Then we will restore the heart of Carmel that has been lost to us," Maradei said.

Maradei pointed out that he supports the Spanish Bay lawsuit, but believes that a negotiated settlement is near as talks progress between Townsend, Monterey Mayor Clyde Roberson (Monterey joined with Carmel in the suit) and Pebble Beach Co. President Tom Oliver.

He said the suit was "a last resort" because "Pebble Beach Co. wouldn't talk to us."

When asked about parking, Maradei quipped, "the parking problem in 30 seconds," in reference to the half-a-minute limit on answers.

Maradei said he supported exploring the feasibility of a shuttle bus for residents, but didn't get time to discuss his long-known policy on the parking facility. Maradei proposes that the city learn all of the costs, benefits and impacts before making an outright endorsement.

A plan for a beach walkway is supported by Maradei. "I would like to see that and we're moving in that direction."

Maradei pointed out that the proposed second kitchen ordinance — called "Gestapo" by Eastwood — was never approved by the council.

Robert Stephenson

Incumbent Stephenson, a building designer and former planning commissioner, called this election "the most important issue" facing Carmel today.

Stephenson attacked Eastwood "and his business-oriented running mates" — Fischer and Laiolo — as a threat to the residential quality of town.

"Business-oriented candidates will only attract more automobiles," was one of Stephenson's charges.

As to allegation that this council conducted a "secret meeting" to buy Mission Ranch, Stephenson pointed out that "state law dictates" a council act in closed session when discussing litigation.

As far as the "fiscal irresponsibility" charges, Stephenson countered that this council has not increased property taxes nor has it raised its budget more than an average of 3 percent annually for the past three years.

"We are on solid financial ground and we intend to stay that way," he said.

He also voiced concern about the "show biz, circus atmosphere" in town ever since Eastwood announced his candidacy.

ON MISSION RANCH, Stephenson said the city did not make any attempts to buy the property or annex the site while the present use was maintained.

However, when the owners proposed to develop about 60 units there, "it became of vital importance to the city that it not change so much."

Stephenson favors keeping the Spanish Bay lawsuit active and continuing to negotiate with the company.

Stephenson favors the senior citizen housing project because of the "ideal location" and need. He bristled at Laiolo's comments that the land cost is too high, saying that no low-cost housing is economical and that's why nearly all such projects are developed by government agencies.

Second kitchens, Stephenson added, have been illegal "long before this council" and there is no easy solution to the problem.

Stephenson also supports the construction of a parking facility at Sunset Center.

Tom May

May, a personal finance asset manager and former councilman, said there are three key issues confronting Carmel: "choking traffic, money waste and bad government."

May called himself the "positive candidate" and promised that "I get things done...A vote for me is a vote for substance."

And he added, "government is the servant, not the master."

May said that the "choking" traffic is "driving down" property values and proposes to build "scattered" parking facilities throughout town rather than just one large garage at Sunset Center.

May called Piccadilly Park an "artificial monster that is not getting any use" and complained that the city spends too much money on consultant reports that "just sit on shelves."

Remodeling city hall without providing additional parking also was criticized by May.

May proposes using endowment funds to purchase Mission Ranch and favors a "low key" walkway on Scenic Road fronting Carmel Beach.

The senior citizen housing project is the "most ridiculous money waste," said May, who proposes buying more inexpensive property outside the city.

He also supports joining the Holman High Task Force as "an indication of faith" that a solution to the traffic problems can be worked out.

The restriction on parking on Scenic Road one-half hour after sunset is a "denial of residential rights," May claimed.

Don Lampson

Lampson, a correctional officer at Soledad Prison, took the podium, looked to May and said, "I sure wish I had said all that stuff."

Lampson is running on a platform of being more friendly to residents and business people alike. He advocates an open, responsive government that "is just plain people."

He said the council should treat all who appear before it as "a neighbor rather than from a power position...I think we should be nicer to each other."

Lampson says that "a lot of things are artificial crises...Parking and tourists problems have gone on since cars first started coming to Carmel."

Public restrooms at Devendorf Park are supported by Lampson. The present council says "they're coming, they're coming. Well it's been 15 years and they still haven't shown up."

Lampson questions the speed in which the city is acting on the purchase of Mission Ranch. "All of a sudden we've got to have it right now. Why not before?...It's an awfully expensive view."

Carrying on the Spanish Bay lawsuit is "beating a dead horse," said Lampson, who opposes the project but feels that it's a foregone conclusion.

As with all of the city litigation, Lampson believes that the council should actively seek a negotiated settlement rather than continuing to spend tax dollars on the lawsuits.

Lampson thinks the city should first repair the access stairways and take down the wire fence before it proceeds to develop the walkway.

And he wants an access ramp to the library for the elderly and handicapped before more plans are made for expansion.

On the parking garage, Lampson said that "if it is such a good deal" than the city should contract with a private developer to build a facility at Sunset Center. A shuttle bus, he said, "will just be one more vehicle in the traffic jam."

Lampson got in one of the better quips of the night when he was asked about affordable housing for the younger people. As far as he's concerned, Lampson thinks families just want the children to stay "so they can make sure they eat their vegetables...Most young people should get out of this little town and see the world."

Carmel voters like Eastwood

CARMEL VOTERS will go to the polls April 8 and overwhelmingly select world-famous actor Clint Eastwood as this town's next mayor.

That is according to a random, unofficial, non-scientific poll conducted earlier this week by the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook and KMST-TV.

The telephone poll surveyed 126 Carmel voters taken at random from the current registration rolls.

Eastwood was the clear winner, outpolling incumbent Mayor Charlotte Townsend by a 77 (61 percent) to 31 (25 percent) margin.

Environmentalist Tim Grady received a single tally while businessman Paul Laub was shutout in the unofficial poll. Four voters said they were undecided.

In the council race, the random survey indicated that Elinor Laiolo and Bob Fischer are ahead, but a large undecided voter bloc still looms.

Laiolo tallied 58, followed by Fischer with 48; David Maradei, 24; Robert Stephenson, 14; Tom May, 11; Anne Woolworth, 4; Don Lampson, 3; and Robert Weber, 2.

However if the 43 "undecideds" are any indication of an overall voter uncertainty, the council race could still be wide open.

May the stewards prevail

Dear Editor:

I am writing to express my appreciation to Mayor Charlotte Townsend for her consistent support of our efforts to preserve the integrity of Del Monte Forest. As a forest resident who has fought a long battle against overdevelopment, I have been heartened by her commitment to the protection of this beautiful area. She, and the other members of the Carmel City Council, have rightfully perceived the interdependence of each part of the peninsula and the devastating impact limitless growth will have on us all.

The residents of Carmel have an unusually clean-cut choice in the upcoming election. The challenge of maintaining the fragile glory of this special place as opposed to the credo "Tourism at any cost." The fate of the forest rides on this choice as well. May the good stewards prevail.

A healing place

Dear Editor:

The people who created Carmel were intelligent and artistic. They left the trees and built the village around them. They didn't pave every square inch; one's feet can feel the earth. The air is clean; one is close to nature. It is a healing place.

Many visitors, charmed by its beauty, are attracted to the village, and inevitably other people, attracted by the money to be made from the visitors, are also attracted to the village. Some of the latter don't understand what the town is about. They think only of business and the money to be made. They are insensitive to the quality of life Carmel offers, and they can be very destructive to it.

The present mayor cares about the beauty and charm of Carmel. She is trying to defend and maintain a quality of life against the onslaught of "progress." She deserves to be returned to office.

Ann Whitworth
Pebble Beach

Continue fine work

Dear Editor:

In our travels throughout the country, my wife and I often comment how beautiful areas have been spoiled by unthinking builders and developers. We ask: "Why did they do it? Why did the local authorities permit it? It's not in keeping with the neighborhood's character."

Then we discovered Carmel. What a quaint and beautiful village. And we ask: "How did they ever do it? What kind of controls or restrictions do the local authorities apply to keep it this way? Thank God for those in charge. They know what they're doing. And may they continue their fine work."

Now we have learned that there are those in Carmel who are opposed to the restrictions that have made it great. They want to do things their way — the wrong way.

Like millions of other Americans who love to visit Carmel, we trust the citizens of such a lovely and picturesque village will recognize and appreciate what they've got and re-elect Mayor Charlotte Townsend. For when we come back again and again, we want to find Carmel the way we left it. As for the actor and mayor candidate, Clint Eastwood, let him make his day some other way.

Alleviating the pall

Dear Editor:

In the summer of 1985, I had the pleasure of making a long overdue return visit to the Monterey Peninsula. It was a particular pleasure to visit Carmel where I lived from 1973 to 1975 while I was stationed at the Naval Postgraduate School.

Consider my voice as one of many in the chorus of voices which sings the praises of Carmel. A measure of Carmel's appeal is the number of people who fulfill their dreams by living there and the remainder of us who partake of this charming municipality through our occasional visits.

One specific lasting impression Carmel left on me was the city's tree ordinance. We used Carmel's ordinance as a model for a similar ordinance here in Takoma Park which was unanimously enacted in 1983.

During my visit last summer, it was disturbing to learn of the nature of Clint Eastwood's zoning battle with the city. Considering its size and the constraints of an essential resource (water), the city government, especially the planning commission, does an exemplary job of thoughtful planning that other communities would do well to follow.

In his latest endeavor, announcing his candidacy for mayor, Mr. Eastwood states that a pall has settled over Carmel. If anything, a pall settled over Mr. Eastwood's development plans and we now have his delayed response. To the citizens of Carmel, the character of your city is special — it is yours to save or lose. To Mr. Eastwood, you could probably alleviate this alleged pall by heading south to Venice or some other locale perhaps less "appalling" to your taste. I'm sure it would make many folks' day.

Votes in England?

Dear Editor:

I am getting embarrassed for our Mayor Townsend, why oh why, is she parading in front of TV cameras and granting interviews from stations and newspapers all over the world? She may be on a personal ego trip, but she is turning our local election into a media circus. Even in England? Does she think there are votes over there.

Barbara Podoloff
Carmel

Weigh facts carefully

Dear Editor:

The world-wide hullabaloo over the coming elections in Carmel will not, I hope, obscure certain basic facts which the residents of our village must consider before casting their votes. The facts, as I see them, are relatively simple.

In 1929 it was established that Carmel was to be primarily and predominantly a residential city wherein business would be subordinated to its residential character. The city governments of Carmel, both past and present, have for the most part done well in following this dictum in spite of the ever-mounting pressure from business expansionists and developers of one kind or another. If they had not been diligent, our village, and I have known Carmel since 1932, would have long since become honky-tonk, its physical beauty gradually scarred to a point of no return.

So, think on it, residents of Carmel. I, for one, want no one on the council or as mayor of our village whose interests may be divided — regardless of their protestations to the contrary — and who, eventually, might be tempted to deviate from the dictums of the past. I also want no one who thinks "progress" is inevitable or that Carmel should remain in a cocoon and not be involved in what happens on its environs such as the Mission Ranch for example.

These are factors that will determine how I vote. I hope all residents will weigh them carefully. The future of our town may depend upon it.

Jerald W. Elwood
Carmel

Vote for long-time resident

Dear Editor:

A vote for Bob Fischer is a vote for a long-time resident who would make a very good city councilman. He invested 31 years working with our police department and he has the interests of the residents at heart.

This looks like an ominous turning point in the future of Carmel. We have parking, pollution, and congestion problems and it's going to get worse...It's tough enough now for us to cross the street without being wiped out.

Let's vote for a man who espouses and will work for a program of sane, controlled growth and who has concern for the almost-forgotten people who built and nurtured this lovely town that is now being so shamefully exploited. Vote for Bob Fischer.

Fair and professional

Dear Editor:

Carmel-by-the-Sea is one of the most beautiful places on earth. That is why you and I live here. Right?

O.K. then. Would you move into a magnificent home in the woods and pour a concrete walk around it? Would you then cut down most of the trees and build a nice gift shop and restaurant on the same lot? Would you put a neon sign in front and build bigger and faster roads so that people could get there quickly? Of course not.

I like cities. They serve a great need.

But Carmel-by-the-Sea must be preserved as a unique, quiet village. I feel that Charlotte Townsend will continue to serve residents and business people in a fair, professional manner. She will continue to spend the time and effort necessary to perform her difficult task, as she has in the past.

Barbara Bryan
Carmel

Adding insult to injury

Dear Editor:

Over the years we have been advised that parking in Carmel-by-the-Sea is a problem even though personal experiences find parking much less a problem than traffic safety. As a resident attending the March 15, 1986, city council session on parking, it was astounding to hear that $50,000 has been committed to a parking supply and use study.

For the few attending the meeting, we heard a mildly interesting "accounting" of the Monterey parking structure system and a preliminary report on the parking study that was lacking in substance. Hopefully, the traffic safety concerns will be addressed in the fullness of time.

There seems to be an undercurrent that a parking structure and possibly a shuttle bus will resolve the parking dilemma. To this observer it appears that solutions are being promoted before a factual and reliable assessment of the situation has been completed.

Perhaps parking is perceived a Carmel deficiency because one has to trudge as many as two city blocks from a parking location. Of course, with our dainty blocks that distance is often far less than that of convenient parking structures or shopping mall parking lots in other communities.

Parking concerns are legitimate issues for a business community seeking to improve potential and excessive residential parking is a nuisance. To assure that we maintain our quality of life style, we do need the maximum parking beneficially utilized. The city is doing an excellent job administering the parking system but the program does need to be fine-tuned from time to time to keep pace with current conditions.

Somehow spending $50,000 to identify this problem appears to add insult to injury. Would that money be better spent paving the Sunset Center parking lot?

Before any further major funding is committed to parking studies, perhaps our city council could consider a residential-business ad hoc committee in the spirit of participative involvement toward the solutions of our community problems.

Bring community together

Dear Editor:

The City of Carmel needs a change in leadership and aren't we fortunate Clint Eastwood is applying for the job.

With Clint's proven administrative and business management abilities, plus his dedication to preserving the quality of life in our beautiful and unique area, I'm confident he'll perform outstandingly as our mayor. This man's concepts of controlled growth and fiscal responsibility will help resolve city problems and his positive attitude will bring back the spirit of friendliness.

During the 15 years I've known Clint he has been very supportive of the Carmel Police Department and the youth activity programs in our community. Clint Eastwood will listen to all the people, "Bringing the Community Together."

Give Clint a chance

Dear Editor:

Clint Eastwood, I believe, is being judged very unfairly by many voters in Carmel, as a shoot-um-up, Hollywood cowboy who, if elected mayor, will turn our village into a tourists' Western sideshow, and our business district into another Rodeo Drive.

I was admittedly undecided about my vote until I heard him speak, and was very impressed with his views. Mr. Eastwood has chosen Carmel as his home because he likes the village life and doesn't want that to change. He is ready to address the issues that need to be resolved, and I believe with his intelligence, business exertise and ability to work with people that he will make a wonderful mayor.

Give him a chance, listen to him speak at one of the many neighborhood gatherings and then make up your mind. Personally, I think we're fortunate to have a man of his quality running for mayor.

Votes for Fischer

Dear Editor:

During my 25 years as Chief of Police of the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea, council candidate Francis P. "Bob" Fischer was one of my top police officers. When I retired, he was promoted to the position of captain of police.

He was one who always strived to better himself in order to better serve his city. He retired from the Carmel Police Department as assistant chief of police.

I can personally vouch for Bob's integrity, loyalty and dedication to his duties as a police officer. These qualities, I am sure, will be carried with him to perform his duties as a Councilmember of Carmel.

Bob Fischer has our votes.

Carmel has a choice

Dear Editor:

Many Carmel elections have been bitterly contested, but the current one will probably break all previous records for both acerbity and inaccuracy. Like others before her, the incumbent mayor is creating fictitious dangers in order to claim that only she could conquer them.

Take, for example, the claim made in a letter that is being circulated on her behalf which implies, among other things, that she and her predecessors "saved" Carmel from someone's attempt to put a huge hotel on Carmel's beachfront. This is pure fiction.

I was Carmel's city clerk and city administrator from 1962 through 1977, and during that period, nobody approached the city council with a proposal for a hotel on the beach. Furthermore, one of the first things I did when I joined the city in 1962 was to read through the minutes of every city council meeting from the date of incorporation to the present. There is absolutely nothing in those minutes to indicate that anyone had ever submitted a proposal to any city council for a hotel on the beach.

In short, there is not now and never has been any attempt by anyone to build a hotel on the beach. The implication that this was a real threat is pure fantasy.

Another example. The incumbent mayor is threatening that the election of a famous actor to "her" job will bring untold hordes of tourists to Carmel. Again, this is an imaginary "paper tiger" that is simply being created in an attempt to frighten some unthinking residents into returning her to office once again.

If tourism wer e indeed a serious concern of the incumbent mayor, we would expect her to strongly oppose the canonization of Father Junipero Serra, since that is definitely going to bring to Carmel millions of people who would not otherwise visit us. However, she has made no mention of this actual "tourist threat." We can thereby assume that tourism and tourists are not her real concern. Rather, her concern is getting reelected — at any cost.

Still another imaginary threat is the incumbent mayor's claim that any mayor but her would permit business to take over and bury the residents. This has been a favorite theme of hers, and unfortunately of some of her predecessors who were equally desperate for election or reelection. Yet the fact remains that without the business community and the huge tax revenues it brings to Carmel, the city would have serious fiscal problems and the residents would have much, much higher taxes on their homes.

Carmel does indeed have problems. Still, a great many of the city's problems of today have been talked about for 50 years or more. City councils were debating the parking problem before World War II. They were still worrying about it 15 years ago when they were offered an opportunity to have a parking garage built on the north end of Sunset

Center at no cost to the city. The city council of that time decided against it, and Carmel is still faced with an increasing and unsolved parking problem.

Today Carmel is facing another critical crossroads. The election of one candidate over another has sometimes made little difference in the course of Carmel's 70-year history, but there have been other times when the election of the right candidate has made a tremendous difference. Carmel is once again at such a point, and the choice made in April will have a profound and long-lasting effect on Carmel's future.

The true value of a good mayor in Carmel, or any other general law city, lies in the wise and competent leadership of the city council. The best mayors of the past have been just that — good and wise leaders of their city councils.

There are only two real reasons why anyone would run for public office. One, which all would profess to, is a true dedication to the community, a willingness to give of time, energy, and self in serving fellow citizens. The other reason is a desire for public acclaim and recognition.

There have been both kinds on Carmel's city councils over the past years, but sometimes it took quite a while for the voters to realize which was which.

Today Carmel has the chance to elect a man who belongs truly to the first class — a man who obviously has no need for further public adulation, a man who truly cares about his own home town, and a man who did his homework and understands the job of mayor in a general law city. That man is Clint Eastwood. It is seldom that a man of this caliber offers himself for public service in a small town, and Carmel is indeed fortunate that he is willing to do so.

The voters of Carmel have a choice. If they make the right choice, the intelligent choice, they will elect Clint Eastwood as their new mayor. If they do not elect him, they will doom themselves and Carmel to another term of what they have been suffering from for the past four years — contention over ice cream cones on the sidewalks, panic over helicopters, senseless bickering in council meetings, and the creation of "paper tigers" to be battled while ignoring the real problems facing Carmel.

Carmel deserves better than it has been getting. Carmel needs Clint Eastwood.

Whose village is it?

Dear Editor:

I would like to see an in-depth study done of the background of each of the candidates for mayor and city council and incumbents. I would like to know how many of the candidates were born in Carmel, or how long each has lived here. I would like to know if they own their homes, if they own other property that is used for commercial and/or rental income, if they have ever been or are presently in business in Carmel or surrounding area.

It is one thing to continually read about what each candidate "stands for," but there is so much spouting off about "their" village I would like to know just how long the "village" has been theirs and what "their" contributions to "their" village have been.

I would also like to see in print the various candidates' hypothetical plans for keeping Carmel the way it is, purchasing the various properties that the existing council want to purchase, the funding of the lawsuits that the council is consistently involved in and keeping the quality of life we have here without the "dirty dollars" of the business community and the "visitors."

Mr. Editor, print in black and white, easy to understand language just where Carmel would be financially without the money of the business community and tourism. I can assure you that if all those dollars were withheld a hue and cry would ensue that could be heard for miles. Maybe the residents of Carmel whose views are always being touted by the incumbent Mayor and council should know exactly where the butter on their bread comes from.

You asked for it

Dear Editor:

Those boos given Charlotte Townsend when she started to speak at the church on Tuesday night came from the business community who fervently support the takeover of the city council so they can do as they please without regard to the residents.

If Eastwood should be elected Carmel can say goodbye to its cherished lifestyle and this goes for those who live in the unincorporated areas. Here comes more T-shirt stores, more tourists and more automobiles.

Furthermore Eastwood does not understand the impact of outside development upon Carmel which is a real tragedy. Possibly he wants more hotels to bring more tourists to spend more money.

Residents of Carmel-by-the-Sea if you don't vote for Charlotte Townsend who has proven her ability to protect you then it can truly be said that you asked for it.

Strict building codes

Dear Editor:

A few months ago as I was walking in the business district of Carmel a visitor approached me to inquire if I lived here. On replying that I did he beamed broadly and looking around he said, "Mighty fine city, I have traveled all over, never seen anything like this."

After a few moments of thought he added, "Must have very strict building codes."

I explained that we certainly did to which he replied, "Keep up the good work — mighty fine!" He continued his walk obviously enjoying this rarity which had taken half his lifetime to find.

What does it mean exactly the suggestion "...the loosening up the reins on building codes"? Does it mean death to this beautiful 'rarity,' namely Carmel-by-the-Sea?

Time for a change

Dear Editor:

In four years practically nothing has been accomplished for the residents of Carmel by the council incumbents, Stephenson, Maradei and Townsend. They did rebuild the city hall where they work and Piccadilly Park was landscaped at an excessive cost.

Through four years of procrastination they added layers of regulations and bureaucratic detail with a master plan. You can't sell your home, add a room or a fence without city approval.

The incumbent council members, in the guise of supporting the residents, have not used simple management ability to solve the major problems in Carmel. They have spent most of their time on lawsuits and fighting the business community.

1. Parking — No plans. No use of parking funds! No results. Day parkers in residential area; nothing done. Move 54 parking spaces off Scenic Drive to other residential areas will confirm a need for a vote for a council change.

2. Traffic control — Nothing done! Here Bob Fischer's experience would be an enormous help.

3. Tax increase for residents — Property off tax rolls; library 3 lots, low-cost housing lots, Piccadilly Park, 20 empty stores. What next?

4. Public Toilets — after four years one set approved; not built. Needed at least three sets. Disgusting portable toilets in library parking lot for four years shows lack of progress and management ability of Maradei, Stephenson and Townsend. The incumbents use the nice new toilets in city hall.

5. Library — A "half-asked" annex forced through by Maradei and Townsend is no solution. A split library across a street anyone knows will cost $30,000 to $40,000 a year more to operate. Buy the buildings next to the library and do the right job like Monterey and Pacific Grove.

6. Litigation — $90,000 to $100,000 each year for four years has been spent by this council for attorneys with little results. New competent council members with the desire to negotiate could do better.

7. Lack of council competent planning — Gamble Estate cut 14 small lots into large lots; hence large $500,000 homes being built. Council on record for smaller homes. Design control: Shugart Building, Cottage Row shops and Chimney condominiums not in keeping with residential interest of Carmel.

8. More national retail stores — Approved Saks Fifth Avenue store but would not let a local person start a soda fountain in a building that had closed two restaurants. We get another national chain store but have no place to buy a milkshake or ice cream cone in the evening in Carmel. Is there a special reason the council did not oppose the major chain store?

9. Mission Ranch property — The state parks division has money for this type of purchase. A strong mayor who can talk to important people on a one-to-one basis could accomplish more than suing the Mission Ranch.

10. Water rationing — incumbents have not shown strong support for a new dam.

11. Scenic Road — Another half job; after four years a partial retaining wall and a eyesore fence.

There are more projects our council has not considered to help us residents. They have had four years of procrastination.

What the council has done, through their lack of negotiating and management ability, is to drive a wedge between the business and residential areas of Carmel.

Carmel needs new leadership with the ability to take care of the residents needs while coordinating the business activity for the benefit of the residents. Time for a change!

Landlords at fault

Dear Editor:

One hears and reads so much about the disagreements between Carmel's residents and its merchants. I submit that the major problems stem from another quarter.

Carmel's merchants and gallery owners offer unique delights for resident and visitor alike. Carmel's merchants are here because they value Carmel's ambience — just as non-merchants do.

The true problems of Carmel are the greedy, grasping, arrogant landlords of the business district who view the merchants as nothing more than sheep to be fleeced. Stores off Ocean can cost more than $4 a square foot when the full effect of their triple net lease is computed. In other words, the landlord does no maintenance and takes the deductions while the tenant pays the property taxes and insurance. So that inflation will not affect profits there is the CPI kicker to raise rents with the consumer price index. At the beginning of the lease some landlords will let you pay key money, typically in the tens of thousands of dollars which entitles you to rent the space.

This past week I called about a shop for rent. The rent was fairly high and all the above costs were added in, but it was not enough for her. She decided that inflation might not pump up her profits fast enough. She decided that the rent will increase at 7% a year or CPI — whichever is more. She would not lease that space for more than three years, and you may not have an option to renew.

Is it truly surprising that any business catering to the local trade cannot long remain here in the face of these rent-gouging practices. Think back over the past few years. How many local service-oriented businesses have been forced to close their doors. Likely the rest will follow.

To be in business in Carmel you must accept the fact that you will work six or seven days a week to subsidize your landlord's greed and satisfy yourself with the "privilege" of being a Carmel merchant.

Perhaps rather than regulating the number of galleries or antique shops the "village" government can explore ways to regulate the unconscionable behavior of the landlords. If you have sign control, why not lease control. Do you really want T-shirt shops that sell rabbit skin coats?

An embarrassment

Dear Editor:

As a concerned citizen of Carmel working for the Eastwood campaign effort for two months and talking with almost a thousand people I have become acutely aware of their concerns.

Though the incumbent administration may have good intentions, their accomplishments are an embarrassment. How can they ignore the desires of the citizens by continually disregarding the recommendations of the forestry commission, planning commission, library board, etc.

They are elected to represent the people of Carmel and their desires but have instead set themselves up as an oligarchy (democracy be damned) to decide themselves what is best for Carmel. They have obligated thousands of dollars in consultant fees (closing the Carmel gate to Pebble Beach and building a library annex in the middle of Lincoln Street) without soliciting the desires of the people — then spending more of our money for a survey that totally rejected both concepts. Tell me about prudent fiscal policy!

How many people have resigned from the various advisory boards to the city council in depair? Why are lawsuits the first line of defense concerning our sphere of influence (Odello, Pebble Beach Co., Mission Ranch) instead of negotiation? Why are we subjected to long, inconclusive city council meetings arguing of trivial matters and intimidating citizens while major issues lie dormant.

A genuine leader

Dear Editor:

If all the Carmel voters would take time to meet Mr. Eastwood in person they would find out what a genuine leader we would have for our mayor.

He is not a politician. He is a long-time resident of Carmel and a man who has run his own business for 20 years. He is a man that could pull our town together as a team and eliminate all the bickering between business and the residences without compromising the integrity and privacy of our citizens.

Serving the community

Dear Editor:

What's this about Clint Eastwood not serving his home community? Following are a few examples of time and effort he's donated over the years — helped raise $7,000 for Save Jacks Peak Program, was an original board member of Carmel Sunset Gym, participated in numerous charity golf tournaments, lent his name and played in many tennis tournaments raising money for such worthy causes as symphony, SPCA, Hospice and more, held numerous premieres of his own films, donating proceeds to local charities, and funded matching grants in our area as an appointed member of the National Endowment for the Arts.

Clint's history of residency here has hardly been one of "taking" nor of "absenteeism," and I find nowhere a mandate stating a career in the motion picture industry carries with it a forfeiture of respected citizenship, including running for public office. The "celebrity ritual" is seldom created by those upon whom it falls; for the most part, it's demanded by the public and the media follows.

What were Clint's priorities Academy Award presentation night? He was at a neighborhood gathering in Carmel answering questions about his ideas on the direction the city should take.

Having a 24-hour-a-day, 7-day-a-week availability, and 365-day-a-year in-town residency does not necessarily guarantee effective management and leadership merit. Rather, this kind of "on-duty-performance" seems to dictate lack of organizational time.

Bonafide voters in Carmel-by-the-Sea, don't let the opposition hype fool you. Take the time to meet Clint, talk to him, and find out for yourselves.

Old-timer for Eastwood

Dear Editor:

You might call me one of the "Old-timers for Eastwood." I think that we should vote out the present mayor and city council members because it is time for a change.

Through the years, the folks here have made some big mistakes. The Plaza, The Jade Tree, and many other large or ugly buildings have been constructed. Yes, we took Sunset away from our kids. However, suing Spanish Bay or buying the Mission Ranch will not cure the guilty feelings that we have concerning our own village.

There is a lot to be done within our town in order to keep our village a good place in which to live. For example, in my immediate residential neighborhood, we suffer from five weekend rentals. (The council has been aware of this.) Also, the Carmel city forest is rotting and needs help. Really, a person does not have to look far to see problems for the Carmel city government.

Clint Eastwood wants to take care of problems within Carmel. What he says makes sense. We should give him a chance to make Carmel a better, happier place.

Will real Clint stand up?

Dear Editor:

The purpose of a candidate's statement on the sample ballot is to inform the voter about the basic statistics of the candidate; educational background, personal information, past community service and political service, if any, as well as philosophy and platform.

Clint Eastwood's ballot statement as well as the brochure passed out at the Carmel Citizens' Committee meeting March 17 express the easy aims of any candidate seeking office, with the basic diatribe against the incumbent, but nothing solid.

It is common knowledge that Clint Eastwood has spawned a flock of movies and has made and managed a lot of movie money.

But who is Clint Eastwood? Is he a one-dimensional image on the silver screen? Is he a well-rounded citizen capable of solving Carmel's complex problems? His lack of interest in attending council meetings or other local public service sessions — except when his own business is involved — give no clue as to his purported interest in public service.

Voters have a right to know something important or relevant about a candidate to cast an intelligent vote — particularly in a community where the formal educational level of the voters is one of the highest in the state.

Will the real Clint Eastwood stand up, please?

A vote from Oregon

Dear Editor:

The community of Carmel is very fortunate to have an individual with recognition and respect such as Mr. Eastwood, willing to hold office on your behalf. His interests and abilities to make improvements to the local business scene should not be taken lightly.

Every community should be striving for continued beneficial changes. Unless you are improving and moving forward, you will definitely be sliding back. You will fail miserably if your attempts at success are those which dictate that you should stand still. Take a lesson from an area and a state that tried just that in the past. If Mr. Eastwood wanted to build or expand a restaurant here, I would volunteer my labor at no charge.

I strongly suggest that you elect Mr. Eastwood to the office of mayor.

The thundering hordes

Dear Editor:

The letter from Jean Grace appearing in the Feb. 27 issue, stating a famous person is not a normal person is pure hogwash!

The world-famous actor she is referring to, we know is Clint Eastwood. I believe Clint eats and sleeps the same way we all do, and further, cries when he is pained and laughs when he is happy. The only outstanding thing is that he is a success in his profession. Why criticize him for that?

Also, what is wrong with the "thundering hordes" that make Carmel what it is today? I, as a visitor to Carmel for many years am quite disturbed about the town closing down at 9 at night and am unable to get a cup of coffee; especially when I spend a great deal of money in Carmel. Without us, Carmel would be hurting — saleswise and taxwise.

Richard F. Carroll
Pleasanton

Concerned about expansion

Dear Editor:

Recently I read of a person who just moved from Europe to Carmel and is concerned about the expansion of business destroying the village atmosphere.

I hope the person is one who will work against that happening. Too many of us are discouraged after decades of struggling against the encroachment of business into the residential area. Not even one hundred gift shops are enough for the business people. They want more and more malls. Tear down old buildings, put up new and larger ones. "Put in all the shops that traffic will bear," as one put it. In California that could mean the village atmosphere is on its way out soon.

Regulations and plans for Carmel are constantly challenged by business owners who hire top-notch lawyers, forcing the village to spend time, money, and energy, with the village usually losing out. Two of the candidates running for mayor, Eastwood and Laub, are businessmen who have brought suits against the village. If either one becomes mayor, the dream of business people will come true.

I predict the 2,500 people who drive into Carmel each day to work in business places will double. Business and tourists will grow and grow in number. Parking lots will go up. Using the last three decades as an example, business expansion will put Carmel into the envious position business people pray for — more tourists than any other spot in California, except Disneyland.

Taking a stand

Dear Editor:

All of the national media attention on the mayoral race with Clint Eastwood is entertaining but completely misses the point. Mr. Eastwood didn't enter the race to have something to do as a publicity stunt. He entered to protect your rights under the U.S. Constitution to own and use your own property. Mr. Eastwood is taking a stand against the increasing use of growth controls and excessive use of zoning regulations to prohibit the reasonable use of a person's property. There are plenty of examples of such restriction close to my home, too.

In Boulder County, Colo., thousands of acres were recently down zoned (devalued). A zoning official in Jefferson County made a ruling on how much and how a citizen must stack his firewood. Although there is no law regarding this matter a judge ruled a family in noncompliance. The only thing all these people can do now is spend a great deal of money on lawyers.

The Supreme Court of the United States has agreed to hear its first cases on excessive use of zoning (de facto taking) this summer. Mr. Eastwood's election may just save Carmel millions of dollars in legal fees.

BUSINESS BEAT
BY NANCY HILLS

Eclectic group

THIS WEEK, there seems to be a real potpourri of commercial enterprises hitting town. The more the merrier, I guess, and a little diversity never hurt.

FINGERS AND TOES

On Dolores Street near Eighth Avenue is one of those pesky spots between the residential and commercial zones. A business must be "resident serving" and still make the rent. Two successive "resident serving" frame shops tried it and neither one found a market.

But maybe success is at hand with Laurie Ellen — A Nail Salon. If watching my friends chase their fake nails all over the table is any indication, nails are a big thing. (It's a wee disconcerting to be talking to someone while what appears to be part of their anatomy lies unattached on the table.)

Owner Laurie McGarry and her co-worker Linda Zimmerman hopefully will keep you from looking like you're literally falling apart. They provide manicures and pedicures in the shop and hope to one day be able to provide facials and massage. (Up to the city, you know.) They have redecorated the space so you would never know it was a frame shop.

McGarry said they offer gel nails, the newest in formed artificial nail techniques. Better for the natural nail, McGarry said, and they stay on longer. But artificial nails are still an option in this world, so the humble, hom grown nail can be a star, and for both men and women, McGarry said.

"There's a lot of businessmen who need attention to their nails and can't do it themselves," McGarry said. Husbands tell

If you're shoeless, look down at your naked feet, you'll find that there are nails there, too. If you can't see your feet, take my word for it, they're there. (And stop worrying about your fingers and toes because if you can't see your feet, you've got a more serious problem to deal with.)

The pedicure entails much more than the toenail, it includes a massage all the way up to the knee and the removal of callouses and rough spots, McGarry said.

"It's very relaxing," she explained.

WALLS, WINDOWS AND WALL-TO-WALL

Interior design seems to be as popular in this area as exterior design. Luckily, however, one's home interior furnishings is still strictly up to one's own choice (and one's resistance or compliance to peer pressure).

Meredith Crowell Camp's Monterey Bay Design Center on the northwest corner of of Junipero and Fourth avenues is a showroom for those eclectic tastes that can go into any living space.

Camp is moving what she calls a "showroom" for architects and interior designers — also open to the public — into a warehouse within the Handley Lumberyard.

"It's the largest (showroom), I believe, in Northern California," she said.

Not for impulse buying, her selection of interior furnishings includes 7,000 fabric samples, numerous carpets (including custom-dyed carpets), window dressings and just about anything that is needed to make a house a home (or office.)

No impulse buying because Camp has to order the merchandise. There are no or very few buy-it-and-take-it-home items, Camp said.

The general public pays the retail price but architects and interior designers get a discount, she added.

Camp said she is an interior designer herself and works out of her home in Carmel Valley. Some of her clients, she said, have been Pebble Beach Co., Chatmar Corp., Paul Mortuary, and Booze, Allen and Hamilton. Camp said she will continue her work as an interior designer.

ART SALE

Rose Rock Gallery has aquired a new owner. Michael Starring (I will refrain from bad puns on his last name) has bought the art gallery on the corner of Dolores Street and Fifth Avenue from Patricia Selin, who, I recall, was one of my first interviews. Always makes me sad when these things change — but now Starring has done an interview, too, so I'll be sad if he sells and moves on.

Starring said he has changed the art offered at the gallery from Selin's abstract to impressionism and realism.

Before he purchased Rose Rock, Starring worked as an art representative and bought Rose Rock to "get as many California and local artists into a Carmel gallery" as he could.

Right now, Starring said, he has watercolors by Brent Overby, Del Haley and the European works of Alfredo D'Annunzio. In all, he represents five Carmel artists.

"I'm featuring a lot of up-and-coming young artists who have been in galleries before, but are still at the beginning of the price ladder," Starring explained.

Selin won't disappear from the art scene, according to

Mission Ranch benefits

John Kirchenbauer of Carmel hopes to raise funds for the city purchase of Mission Ranch through selling this original rare painting of Mission Ranch created by the late artist Phil Nesbit. Nesbit was a world-renowned artist and successful writer of children's books. This painting of early Mission Ranch used to hang at the resort until Kirchenbauer bought it several years ago. With word that the city wants to buy Mission Ranch and preserve it, Kirchenbauer has placed the painting for sale, with most of the proceeds going to the city for the purchase. Kirchenbauer lists the painting at $28,000, of which $20,000 will be donated. For more information, contact Kirchenbauer at 624-9114 or write him at P.O. Box 2105, Carmel, Ca. 93921.

Candidates

Elinor Laiolo

In her opening statement, Laiolo, a retired public school administrator, said she is concerned about the cost of the senior citizen housing project, parking, consultant fees, legal costs and "how people are treated," by the present council.

LAIOLO SAID citizens consistently support a Sunset Center garage "but still there isn't a parking facility."

For the cost of the senior citizen housing facility the city should have at least added more density than the 15 units.

"I think that number could easily be doubled," she said, pointing out that there is a three-year waiting list for the existing units operated by the Carmel Foundation.

She said the "most positive way" to settle Spanish Bay litigation is through negotiation and she complained about the lawsuit costs.

Laiolo said she would not vote to expand the commercial district and she indicated "concern" over the beach walkway that "would permanently alter" the beach shoreline.

Robert Weber

Weber, a self-styled environmental poet, used his opening statement to criticize media coverage of the campaign, saying that the press has "misrepresented" the goals of the Environmentalist Party and has "censored" many of his statements.

Weber espoused the philosophy of the Environmentalist Party, which is to ban offshore oil drilling, prohibit nuclear weapons, and live in harmony with nature.

"We want to protect our right to walk on the sand," he said. "We are part of the environment. We were meant to walk on the earth, not on cement."

He called the beach walkway a proposal prepared by "hypocritical con artists," opposed public restrooms in parks and said the proposed Carmel River dam is only necessary for more hotels.

Weber also supported litigation to fight the Spanish Bay resort project and opposes the parking garage because it's "just more asphalt."

Bob Fischer

Fischer, the retired Assistant Carmel Police Chief, promised to "bring the community together; all of us."

"There has been a blatant hostility on the part of the present city council to make a division between the business community and residents. It is not there."

Fischer said "the needs and desires are the same" for the business community and residents.

Citing his long association with Carmel as a police officer for 31 years, Fischer said, "I don't think anybody knows this community any better than I do. That includes the present city council. I love this community and I'm not going to change it."

ANNEXING WILL provide the "real control" over Mission Ranch, Fischer said.

On the city lawsuits, Fischer maintains that "my answer is negotiation not litigation."

Fischer commended the present council for its "marvelous job" in armoring the beach banks against the winter storms.

However, he opposed the proposed beach walkway, which will remove about 54 parking spaces from Scenic Road.

"I do question whether I want a walkway of cement on Scenic Drive and the removal of 54 spaces," he said.

Fischer said the senior citizen housing units are "very, very posh" and he wants to increase the density so additional apartments can be developed.

Asked about affordable housing for young people, Fischer replied, "I'd like to see it, but it can't be done."

Anne Woolworth

Woolworth, a past member of the general plan advisory committee and planning commission, said the most important issue today is how to keep Carmel a residential community.

"Carmel has a municipal government, but it is a town not a city," she stressed.

Woolworth maintained her position that any growth must be a matter of "in-filling, replacement and repairing."

"We must not recklessly or thoughtlessly, to use an old cliche, kill the goose that laid the golden egg."

Woolworth supports city legal attempts to force the county to properly plan, and favors the Odello and Spanish Bay litigations.

"What happens there affects us," she said.

Woolworth supports the beach walkway plan, but said she would like to minimize the loss of parking. She opposes the wash-off areas for surfers, saying "that might make us the surfing capital of the world."

She called a large parking facility at Sunset Center "out of scale" with the town, plus "nobody wants to pay for it."

Middle schoolers to visit Italy

Twenty Carmel Middle School students are brushing up on their Spanish these days as they prepare for a two-week exchange program in Barcelona, a seaport in northeastern Spain.

Supt. Robert Infelise has developed the program, an interest he has had since his involvement with the American schools in Barcelona.

The Carmel Middle School students will leave April 7 for Barcelona, where they will spend two weeks attending school and visiting pen pals.

The program will include visits to Petra, a small town on the island of Majorca just off the coast of Spain.

Petra is a sister city for the city of Carmel.

Staff who will attend the exchange program are Jo Brazell, John Waldron and Donna Alonzo.

Students from Barcelona are expected to visit the middle school for two weeks this fall.

To give the students some background on Spain and Majorca, the middle school hosted three special guest speakers recently.

Bishop Thaddeus Shubsda spoke about Spain and provided cultural and historic information about Majorca.

Former Carmel mayors Barney Laiolo and Herb Blanks, who have visited Majorca, presented a slide show and talk about their experiences.

Mayoral candidates cover familiar ground in debates

By MICHAEL GARDNER

EXCEPT FOR Clint Eastwood officially endorsing two council candidates, the televised forums for Carmel mayoral candidates last week were much like TV these days: reruns.

No real new ground was broken as mayoral candidates Charlotte Townsend, Paul Laub, Tim Grady and Eastwood beamed themselves into the voters' living rooms thanks to local television stations KSBW and KMST.

- Incumbent Mayor Townsend again warned of the dangers of development if Eastwood is elected and she painted herself as the protector of the residential interests.
- Eastwood, the world-famous actor, movie producer and director, continued his attack on the present council, which he says has unnecessarily wasted taxpayer dollars on lawsuits and consultant fees. He preached harmony and peace between the business district and residents through open communication and friendliness.
- Paul Laub continued to be the man with the programs, reiterating his platform as a candidate of action. Laub, a property owner and T-shirt entrepreneur, tried to dispel fears that he is a pro-business candidate.
- Tim Grady, the young member of the Environmentalist Party, espoused a pro-conservation stand focusing on banning nuclear power and oil drilling. His main theme is that all issues of development will be decided by the voters via ballot measures rather than by the council.

Carmel voters will go to the polls April 8 to choose a new mayor, who will serve a two-year term that pays $200 monthly.

Two council positions also will be decided from among a pair of incumbents seeking re-election and six challengers. Council members James Wright and Helen Arnold are not up for re-election for two more years.

The eagerly awaited debates, which the metropolitan media says were watched by more than one million viewers, provided no surprises and there were no clear winners either night.

The only new revelation was by Eastwood Monday night when he publicly announced his support of Elinor Laiolo and Bob Fischer for council Eastwood had indicated at private functions that he wants the pair elected, but had never made a confirming statement at a public forum until the television debates.

Eastwood believes that if voters want him to make changes at city hall, he needs a majority on the council that he can work with to implement his ideas.

Although she was never questioned about her endorsements, it's no secret that the mayor prefers that incumbents Robert Stephenson and David Maradei are re-elected.

Following is a synopsis of the statements made by each candidate.

Charlotte Townsend

Mayor Townsend said that the general plan and its implementing ordinances restricting commercial development is a "long-term investment" in Carmel. "It would be so easy to become another shopping community."

Townsend pointed out that she started an ad hoc advisory committee of residents and business people.

On the lawsuit issue, the mayor said the city only goes to court as a "last resort" and that the litigation is directed at the county or Coastal Commission for improper planning rather than at specific people, such as the Odello family. She pointed out that all but one of the cases have been settled.

It is important for the city to keep a watch over its borders and use litigation, she said. "You must be willing to save your quality of life."

She said in the past the city operated via "reactive planning," but now, under her administration, Carmel is in a "planning mode."

On the second kitchen issue, Townsend said it is a "thorny question" because of fears that the residential zone would become proliferated with "duplexes and triplexes." Yet, the city is required by state law to address the low-cost housing issue.

In closing, Townsend again inferred that Eastwood is a developer and stressed that, "save the village is not a fear tactic. It's a clear plea."

Clint Eastwood

"I'd like to take us back to an era of personal public service," said Eastwood in keeping with his campaign theme that the city has not been responsive to its citizens. "The city council must reach out and help people rather than sit in judgment."

Eastwood promised to settle litigation through negotiation and said the Sunset Center parking facility is one of his top priorities.

Eastwood tried to divert concerns that he is a pro-business candidate, saying, "I am not for a lot of development in Carmel despite the pictures that are painted."

But he supports helping business here. "To have progress one must maintain what we have. We can't have things run down."

The council's refusal to be involved in the Holman Highway Task Force is "disgraceful" considering its is "spending thousands and thousands" of dollars on the traffic-related Spanish Bay lawsuit.

He again chastized the city for a proposed ordinance on second kitchens, which includes numerous restrictions. He said the controls would just drive the units "farther underground" and instead the city should find a "friendly way" to negotiate with second kitchen landlords.

Eastwood indicated that he will continue a slow work schedule to devote ample time to the mayoral responsibilities. He added that he has a message service and can be reached at any time despite having an unlisted phone number.

Paul Laub

Laub tried to dispel fears that just because he sells T-shirts that he is pro-business.

"Even though I'm in business I'm against more visitors," Laub said. However, Laub later added that he cannot support legislation to control additional T-shirt shops because that's not his philosophy on business.

But he opposes expansion of the commercial district boundaries, saying "there just isn't a lot of room for more development."

Laub said he wants to see Holman Highway widened, a parking facility developed at Sunset Center, outside the city parking lots and a shuttle service, and public restrooms.

He also wants books filled with pre-approved signs, colors, roof styles, fences and walkways to reduce red tape.

Laub favors negotiation in the lawsuit over Spanish Bay, but would not rule out continuing the action because "it's a little harder to get the attention" of Pebble Beach Co.

"A lawsuit can be the two-by-four," he said.

But he opposes litigation over the Odello property.

Laub supports legalization of second kitchens for children and grandparents, but adds that the units should be "dismantled" if relatives no longer live there.

Laub added that he will bring "ability, skill and enthusiasm" to the job if he is elected.

Tim Grady

It is Grady's philosophy to place all issues of major development before the voters on ballot measures.

He said the duties of politicians should be restricted to preparing the ballot measures.

An environmentalist, Grady would like to see the city buy Mission Ranch and the Odello property for organic farming.

He also wants the city to adopt a leadership role in energy conservation, such as providing solar powered shuttle buses.

Because of the traffic congestion, he said his friends call Carmel "Car Smell."

"I would like to get away from the pseudo-worship of the automobile," Grady said.

Grady, saying the politicians have "sold out," supports city lawsuits trying to block development. He called litigation the only method "common people have to fight back."

A GOOD CONCEPT

I've noticed there are a lot of people who, while cruising down Mission Street via foot power, stop and look into the windows of Concepts. Concepts is a jewelry store on Mission Street near the corner of Sixth Avenue owned by Jacqueline and Douglas Steakley that specializes in individual jewelry artists.

Now there is a little Concepts in Carmel Plaza, way down at the end of the row on the second level. It has taken over a rather petite space that used to be Contempo jewelers.

The smaller Concepts continues the idea of the larger store by featuring the works of crafts people. According to Douglas Steakley, this new location has less expensive, contemporary fashion jewelry designed by individual artists in material like ivory, wood and titanium. All high fashion, but not trendy, he said. Carrying on the fashion theme, the shop will also carry some clothing accessories such as belts and scarves.

The location is hidden away, but is right across from the soon-to-be Saks Fifth Avenue entrance, a major factor, the Steakley's said, in choosing the location.

The Plaza store is not the only new shop the Steakley's have started. Soon they will be opening one in Palo Alto.

IT'S RICE TO BE WARM

Micro Organic Fuel is not a business name I would expect to find in Carmel environs. But there it is. Right on Lincoln Street between Seventh and Eighth avenues.

It's a newly formed company that processes waste products from plants, primarily cellulose, into new products like solid fuel, according to company president Saul Greenberg.

By breaking down "agricultural material wastes" — such as rice hulls — with enzymes, they can reform it into a product, Greenberg explained. The solid fuel is produced from breaking down the rice hulls with coal and sand, Greenberg said. The end result can look like charcoal or wood, but is not dirty and can be used in place of coal without the by-products that coal puts into the air when it is burned, he said.

Right now, Greenberg said, the company is putting together a processing plant in Pakistan, a "third world country" where fuel is needed. These countries, Greenberg said, are stripping the countryside of wood-bearing plants. Since they use wood in their stoves and to cook with, this lack of fuel is serious.

The process was developed by Larry Rogers, an explosives expert and Salinas resident, Greenberg explained. Rogers is the inventor of the four-month old company, Joe Kruth the chief executive officer, and Paul Taylor, Ph.D. the scientific advisor. The process has been around for about two years, he said, and research continues at the company lab in Carson City, Nev.

Other products that the company is making are roof shingles and walls, bulletproof materials and a product that stops x-rays, Greenberg said. The shingles and paneling look like wood but are fire resistant, he added. It can be cut and sawed like wood, too.

ARTIC BAY BOWS OUT

Artic Bay Company in The Crossroads has closed its doors. The combination gallery and clothing store specialized in hand-made products from Alaska and Canada.

Owner Donna Olson is a former school teacher who said she just missed that type of work. She's now working in Salinas as a children's librarian in the northern branch of El Gabilan library.

SYMPHONIE D'ELEGANCE A SMASH

The Monterey County Symphony Guild's 25th "Symphonie d'Elegance" luncheon and fashion show took place March 20 at the Hyatt Regency Monterey. The theme was butterflies, a tribute to Pacific Grove, Butterfly Town, U.S.A., and the fast-paced show was opened by models Susan Henderson, Bella Cutino, Maggie Eastwood Wynberg, Margaret Oliver, Jo Ann Lombardo and Jill Wagner in butterfly costumes.

More than 400 people attended the lavish benefit to view 21 Symphony Guild models wearing 100 of the latest fashions presented by Saks Fifth Avenue. Richard LaSalle and Group provided the lively musical background.

Very evident in the collections of many top designers represented were padded shoulders, both long and short skirts, and petite sizes. All the colors of the rainbow were evident, with special emphasis on black and white in the evening collection and the knits. The eras of the 20s, 30s and 40s were nostalgically portrayed.

A gift of $500 for the scholarship fund from Mrs. John Bissell was presented to the association by the guild, and a check of $20,000, monies raised to date, was presented to the association by Mrs. John A. Andrews, Jr., president of the Monterey Symphony Guild.

Maestro Clark E. Suttle was presented and participated in the drawing. Winner of the grand prize drawing, the Hawaiian package, was won by Mary Ann Brinton. The package includes a two-bedroom suite for one week at Kahana Sunset in Maui, courtesy of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Healey, roundtrip air fare for two, courtesy of United Airlines, and a limousine with champagne, courtesy of Bungays Celebrity Limousine. There were 16 other lucky winners.

FIRE LINES
BY MITCH KASTROS

Weathering the storm

The recent storms have created some problems for this area, and though we have been more fortunate than other parts of the state at this point, we have had our share of damage.

Most of us have experienced power outages, and if we are lucky that is the only hardship we will face during the storm. Although a simple power outage does not seem that serious to most, there are steps you should take to protect yourself, family and property during this time.

First of all, have a flashlight handy to help you get around the house, especially when the power outage first hits. This will make it easier to find candles and other sources of light.

At this point it is very important to go through the house and turn off and unplug all major appliances (TV, stereo, furnace, home computer, refrigerator, etc.). This will protect the appliances from possibly being damaged by an electrical surge when power is restored. If you prefer, you can get the same protection by shutting off the electrical main to the house. Although many appliances have built-in resistors that are designed to alleviate this problem with power surges while the appliance is turned off, they are not always reliable.

Those of you concerned about possible natural gas leaks in your home during the storm, or any time, should know how to shut off your gas main. This is a very simple procedure, involving only a medium-sized pair of channel locks or a crescent wrench. When you find your gas meter, follow the pipe coming up out of the ground and find the first valve on the pipe. This is the main valve, and when it is open, it will run up and down alongside the pipe, or perpendicular to the ground. To shut it off, use the wrench or channel locks and turn the valve one-quarter turn to the right, or until it is positioned crossways to the pipe (parallel to the ground). The main is now shut and will not allow any gas into the house. If you attempt this procedure in the dark, use only a battery powered lantern for light. Don't use an open flame lantern under any circumstances.

When using candles, kerosene lamps and other open flame lanterns to light your home during a power outage, use common sense and caution at all times. Don't leave open flames unattended and try to refrain from fueling open flame lanterns while they are hot. If it is absolutely necessary to refuel a hot lantern do so only in a safe area of the house, preferably outside or in the garage if weather is a factor. Use a funnel when refueling and have a fire extinguisher readily available. It is also wise to have a fire extinguisher available inside the house when open flames are being utilized.

During a heavy storm the fire department, police department, public works and utility companies are usually very busy handling all kinds of emergencies and taking many phone calls. Please don't call any of these companies if you are not reporting an emergency; i.e., medical emergency, fire, downed trees and power lines or serious flooding. Yes, the power is out, and no, we don't know when it will be back, so please don't tie up the lines with these types of calls because it is preventing someone from calling who needs help.

IF YOU received an invitation to a block party with no food, drink or music wouldn't that be a rather dull affair?

But what if we said the guest list includes Charlotte Townsend, Tim Grady and Paul Laub? Still snoring?

Okay, okay. Clint Eastwood will be there too. Satisfied? Now will you attend the party?

The Lincoln Street merchants have organized an old-fashioned block rally to give Carmel residents an opportunity to meet the candidates for Carmel mayor and city council.

The city has given permission to the Lincoln Street residents to close the road between Ocean and Seventh avenues from 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday, April 6 — two days before the election.

"All candidates have been invited by mail and by telephone. We expect them all to be there," said Sally Nasborough of Sally's Boutique.

Nasborough described the affair as an "old-fashioned Yankee Doodle" rally for residents to get acquainted with their candidates for mayor and city council.

'EASTWOOD VEC GRADONACELNIK'

No, our typesetter didn't go crazy; that's an actual headline from the Pomet, a newspaper in Slobodna, Yugoslavia.

It appears that mayoral candidate Eastwood, an avowed Republican and Reagan supporter, has some friends behind the Iron Curtain. I thought he made all those films in Italy.

Of course it couldn't have been that big of a story since Pomet buried Clint on page 25. Hell, he was on the front page of the Wall Street Journal in the U.S.A.

The story found its way from Slobodna to the Pine Cone thanks to Carmelite Nicholas Kovacevich. It was sent to him by George Carr, a former longtime Carmel resident who now lives in Yugoslavia.

I wonder how you say "make my day" over there?

EQUAL ACCESS

Eastwood's unlisted telephone number is one of the campaign issues in a town used to calling the mayor at midnight to complain about a barking dog.

But with all the to-do over Eastwood's accessibility, I wonder why no one questions the availability of one of the other mayoral candidates, Grady, who seeks the "vegi-vote."

Grady's number is not unlisted. He simply doesn't have a telephone.

MEDIA MANIA

Two years ago, City Administrator Doug Schmitz and Planning Director Diane White brought their kids to city hall for election night. Maybe a dozen residents showed and there were enough cookies and punch left over to hold a fund-raising bake sale.

This election night, Schmitz has put together precautionary security, and arranged a press pool at city hall to control the media seeking visuals of the ballot counting.

Only a few members of the press will be allowed inside city hall, thus giving residents brave enough to come out an opportunity to watch the ballot counting, have a cookie and talk to their neighbors.

Additionally, the press is being credentialed for Sunset Center where the candidates have promised to attend a news conference about 60 to 90 minutes after the results are tabulated.

As of March 27, Sunset Center Director Richard Tyler had received 27 requests totaling more than 100 people. One television station wanted to bring nine of its crew.

There's still no truth to the rumor that Dan Rather, Peter Jennings and Tom Brokaw will broadcast live from Carmel that evening.

Note to media: Clint WILL NOT appear at city hall. He will attend the press conference along with the other candidates.

SPEAKING OF...

Speaking of Schmitz, his young son Taylor is celebrating a birthday Election Day.

I think this will be one day Taylor will want his dad to tell him about over and over again.

WHAT CITY-BIZ PROBLEMS?

Lots of talk about town about the age-old city-business relationship.

I just want to tell you that, judging from a scene in Carmel Cafe Sunday noonish, the relationship is just fine.

At a table for two spread with a lavish brunch of waffles for her (business) and omelette for him (city) were ???? Names will not be used to protect the guilty.

My, will the gossipmongers talk (or write)! Maybe I can replace Liz Smith at the Washington Post. The Ear knows.

SAILING ON THE LOVE BOAT

It would make a great segment, I thought to myself, imagining a "neighborhood lady" running for mayor choosing to take a cruise on the "Love Boat" to escape the pressures of the campaign.

There on the bow of the Pacific Princess is her opponent, a megastar who just wants to be a regular guy drinking a few brews down at the pub with some of the boys.

At first they try to avoid each other, but then the captain has them both to his table for dinner. Afterward they get stuck in an elevator and spend 17 hours alone.

As the port of Los Angeles nears and the camera fades, they are walking arm and arm to his sleek white foreign car.

Sorry, it's only a rumor, but maybe Clint can get me a script reading?

THE MAYOR AS BABYSITTER

No, I'm not inferring that the mayor is babysitting this council by the above headline.

What I mean to say is that our spies tell me that Mayor Charlotte Townsend earned a healthy chunk of spending money years ago by babysitting.

That's no big surprise. But what is interesting is that Mayor Townsend more than once spent the night tending a young boy named Robert.

Not Robert Stephenson, Robert Weber, mind you. Weber is a longshot council candidate this election.

SORRY, LARRY

Overheard at city hall: Bob Irvine, the mayor's campaign chief, telling Larry King that Townsend would not be available for a live interview on CNN.

Irvine didn't want the mayor losing an entire day for the interview, even if Larry King is one of the best and the brightest in the electronic media.

As far as Irvine is concerned, the appearance wouldn't win Townsend a single vote when she can better devote her time to local teas.

FREE EATS FOR VOTERS

What a deal. Show your voter ticket stub to the Skillicorns down at the long-closed Country Kitchen (southwest corner of Dolores Street and Seventh Avenue) and you'll be provided some free coffee and doughnuts election day.

"There won't be any politics," said Jack Skillicorn. "We just want to get out the vote."

Skillicorn's offer is good from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. election day.

Wait, you say, Country Kitchen is closed. Well, Jack feels this is a special day so he plans to reopen the restaurant just for the election. So don't eat breakfast and go vote.

Meanwhile, Wednesday at 5 p.m. Friar Tuck's is planning a victory celebration should Eastwood win. Word is free drinks all around once the restaurant closes. But what if he loses? Crow is the menu from what I understand.

I doubt that voters this year will need this extra incentive to cast ballots.

CLINT — THE MAGAZINE

Attention Clint junkies and memorabilia collectors: On the Trail With Clint, a photo magazine has just been released with an initial distribution of 1,000 editions.

The eight-page glossy publication can be had for $3 bucks, of which $1 is donated to the Carmel Youth Center. Such a deal!

I expect to hear from even Charlotte Townsend, David Maradei and Robert Stephenson wanting copies.

Besides, with Mother's Day, Father's Day and all those birthdays coming up, what better cheap gift can you give than Clint! Tossed in for no extra charge is his autograph on page two. Oops, now my second parents, Joanne and Jerry Hubbard of Washington know what they're getting!

Business water use drops, residential use goes up

By NANCY HILLS

AN ANNUAL report on the status of Carmel's water reserve that shows residential water use has increased since last year and commercial use has dropped will be presented to the Carmel Planning Commission during its meeting the day after the city elections.

In its regular meeting at 4 p.m. April 9 in city council chambers, Assistant Planner Brian Roseth will present the commission with his report of water allocated to new building permits issued in 1985 and increases and decreases in water usage during the 1984-1985 fiscal year.

The commission will also review a use permit application for Nature Company, a new restaurant in La Cochon Laque space on Dolores Street, and a change of location for Lady Fingers jewelry store. The commission will be asked to make an administrative determination on the rental of videos at the Village Market.

Roseth's report is in response to city ordinance 85-1 that sets water allocations for all new land use projects or changes within each of the city's zones. The ordinance sets aside water for future uses from 1030.8 ac. ft. allocated to Carmel by the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District.

A draft of Roseth's report states that according to California American Water Co.'s figures from July 1984 to June 1985, water usage dropped in the commercial district from the previous fiscal year by one percent or 2.98 ac. ft. (one acre foot equals 365,000 gallons). Water usage, however, rose in the residential areas during the same time period by 18 percent or 81.91 ac. ft. Overall, water usage had increased by approximately 10 percent from the prior fiscal year when, Roseth said, water use had declined.

The drop in commercial district use of water could be the result of a ban on washing sidewalks, Roseth said, and that the commercial area does not have large areas of landscaping to water.

Roseth attributed the rise in residential usage to dry weather conditions during that fiscal year and the need for residents to irrigate landscaping during that period.

The amount of water used by the residential district, Roseth said, "is really at the mercy of the weather patterns."

An increase in installation of low-flow fixtures in new homes was one good sign Roseth said he had observed recently that might help the water usage in the residential district.

"That has to do with the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District policies," Roseth said.

The water management district gives a connection charge discount if low-flow fixtures, lower than those mandated by the state, are used in new construction.

In new water allocations in 1985, the city issued building permits for a total of 3.6 ac. ft. in the residential zone and gave conceptual approval to projects that would use 4.82 ac. ft. of water.

The water ordinance sets aside a total of 30.6 ac. ft. to new residential development, 12 ac. ft. to the future development of R-4 district, 10.35 to affordable and non-regulated housing and 54.7 to public authority uses. It also sets aside 103.8 ac. ft., or 10 percent of the total allocation for a reserve.

No water was allocated for new development in the commercial district. The report states that "this was done in recognition of city policy favoring residential development." City water policies and ordinances state that no commercial use can use more water in its location than the business that previously had occupied the space.

Candidate statements

The candidates speak out...in their own words

Charlotte Townsend

ALTHOUGH many people may read this statement, it is really intended as a message for my friends and neighbors, citizens of Carmel-by-the-Sea.

Outside interests have brought tremendous pressure to bear in this election. Your phones have rung with questions from Orange County pollsters and our village is swarming with media people from around the world. But in spite of all this out-of-town attention, it is only you, the voters of our village, who are important.

Your ballot on April 8 will decide whether our village will continue to move and progress along its original lines or move away toward encouragement of business, development and tourist interests. Both city questionnaires showed the latter was opposed by a large majority of residents and I believe your votes April 8 will reinforce this finding. Please remember, never before has each vote been more important.

As for myself, my wishes and intentions are simple.

To preserve the tranquility, beauty and human scale of the village of Carmel-by-the-Sea in every possible way.

To encourage small businesses that serve the residents.

To do what can be done to limit the explosion of rents which drives resident-oriented businesses out of town.

To discourage enterprises primarily serving tourists.

To curb the appetite of the developers and expansionists. The example of small communities throughout California and the nation proves the inability of such interests to curb themselves.

To complete the general plan in order to maintain the integrity of the business district and the neighborhoods.

To fight against over-building.

To serve the residents of the village before the commercial interests.

To avoid the attraction of quick fixes for problems caused by the ever-increasing numbers of visitors that come to see and enjoy our little bit of paradise, bringing with them problems of parking, traffic and water use.

To protect our village from the schemes of strangers.

To add to the hospitable nature of our town in small ways, not in large ways that cannot be undone when proved unsuccessful.

To fix what can be fixed. To learn the difference between what can be fixed at once, what needs time for study and what cannot be fixed in any reasonable way. To avoid solving small problems by the creation of large problems.

To keep an open mind in the governance of the village, always remembering that the grand priests of profit and progress are always the first to ask everyone else to be reasonable and the last to exercise reason in their own demands.

To be a vigorous mayor, knowing that I hold office by the will of the people and that it is the residents of Carmel-by-the-Sea whom I will serve to the very limit of my powers.

Clint Eastwood

A PERSON must be strongly motivated to run for mayor of Carmel-by-the-Sea and I am. I have the time and the interest and I have the ability. My primary motive is that we need a change. A change away from the overkill policies of the last four years — overspend, over-regulate, overstaff, and over-interfere.

The fact is that the last four years have produced only one major accomplishment — when our beach was badly damaged by the big storm, the council repaired it as any council would have done. Otherwise it has been four years of bureaucratic delay and procrastination on the major problems of water, parking, traffic, and the library.

The incumbent mayor is grasping at straws to try to show her record of accomplishments during her four years in office. It must have given the old-timers a laugh to read the letter sponsored by her committee which refers to developers wanting to construct a hotel on the beach at the foot of Ocean Avenue. This proposal was mentioned in a 1925 book "Carmel at Work and Play" by Daisy F. Bostick and Dorothea Castlehun and no threat of this hotel has occurred since. To reach back 60 years for issues to try to scare residents into voting for her shows the desperation of her campaign.

We have our internal problems within Carmel which require immediate attention as well as some pressing issues which are external but directly affecting our citizens. Through active negotiation with neighboring municipalities and corporations on the Highway 68 traffic problem, the Carmel River water project, the Odello development, and the Mission Ranch acquisition, much time and many dollars can be saved. The current policy of ultimatums, lawsuits, and outside consultants is very expensive, greatly extends the time for a satisfactory solution, and is the prime reason the problems still exist.

The current administration describes itself as pro-resident. However, ordinance 85-6 of Carmel's Municipal Code covering second kitchens is looming. This ordinance, when passed, would subject second kitchens to inspection and regulation by the city, and occupancy would be determined by the annual income of the tenants.

I would leave the second kitchen alone. This is a way of life for our citizens and provides an income for many older residents.

I intend as mayor to rectify the failures of the current administration. I promise that Carmel will remain residentially oriented but with a friendly, cooperative attitude thorughout. Prudent fiscal management will be exercised to provide the greatest good for the greatest number. I will devote the time required to do the job and be accessible to your needs. This is my highest priority. Together we can govern Carmel in harmony.

Paul Laub

PAUL LAUB is against more visitors, more business, and more development when they cause a decline in the quality of life in our community.

Our success must be handled and controlled. At some point the sheer numbers of visitors will exceed our ability to cope with them. They have already exceeded the current administration's ability...yet this summer should be our busiest ever, now that gas is so cheap.

We need to handle the visitors, their cars, their human needs, and their combined effects. We must treat them as we wish to be treated. We should use the largess that we receive from them as our bounty, to provide for our needs, desires and future.

Outside the city we need: A) the Holman Highway widened to the hospital; B) Highway 1 widened immediately, as the Hatton project is at least seven years off if it exists at all; C) the largest dam practicable, our water quality is lousy and quantity is insufficient.

Inside the city we need and desire: 1. A three-level garage at Sunset; 2. A larger parking area e.g. Hodges property or state right of way with 3. Shuttles for both visitors and residents; 4. Handicap parking downtown and at the Carmel Foundation; 5. Adequate senior housing; 6. A senior emergency aid/care system; 7. Maintain streets and sidewalks and clean the same; 8. Decent respectable public sanitation facilities; 9. A recreation center with indoor swimming pool, hopefully at Mission Ranch; 10. Youth programs led by a youth council and facilities including basketball courts and a skateboard ramp; 11. Police walking the beat and on bicycles. 12. Two-year terms for council members to help keep them responsive; 13. Repeal of the tragic ordinance 84-14; 14. Major reduction in red tape aggravation so as to allow citizens to have efficiency in obtaining what they wish for their homes. Examples are reduction of the planning department's subjective hassling by providing guideline books of pre-approved fences, walls, walkways, roof styles, paint colors, signs, etc. This will allow instant approval. Anything unusual

Timothy Grady

MY CANDIDACY for Mayor of Carmel represents the goals and the ideals of The Environmentalist Party.

Michael Bogatirev started The Environmentalist Party to protect our right as Americans to walk on the earth on public property, and to legalize and legislate every species of life on our public property, so that both native and non-native species are protected in their existing habitats. We need a refuge where we can live separately from the automobile industry. There is too much asphalt and concrete in Carmel, and as Mayor of Carmel, I will require much of this asphalt to be removed to restore the earth for gardens and trails for horses.

Carmel-by-the-Sea should be in the vanguard of environmental awareness. We should lead the state to make California a nuclear-free state and to outlaw oil drilling and hotel development on the coastline. Our city can stop the Spanish Bay golf course and hotel project through lawsuits. Thousands of Monterey Peninsula residents have established legal rights to use Spanish Bay as open space, but the Monterey County Supervisors sold out to the graft and the corruption that distinguished their public offices. The Pebble Beach Co. should not be allowed to build or landscape the dunes at Spanish Bay and Asilomar Beach. Spanish Bay should be rezoned for open space, which is what it was before the county supervisors sold out to the hotel developers. The same hotel developers are really the same oil companies and insurance companies who have plans to develop the coastal dunes at Del Monte Beach, Sand City, Seaside, Marina and in Big Sur.

I haven't heard about any opposition to the Spanish Bay hotel from Assemblyman Sam Farr or from Sen. Henry Mello. The reason why they are silent is obvious, all you need to do to find out is to look at what our politicians did to the Asilomar State Park, which they dedicated to a multi-million dollar hotel convention center on our public property.

The politicians who are leeching off the Asilomar State Park are part of Governor Deukmejian's sell-out of our state parks to hotel developers and landscaping con artists.

The hypocritical "ecologists" who built the Carmel Beach fence are the same vegetation quacks who want to outlaw walking on the Spanish Bay and Asilomar sand dunes because they want more hotels and golf courses and money. The destruction of the last natural frog pond in the Asilomar dunes in Pacific Grove, which was at 450 Asilomar, is an example of the greed and the treachery that dominates our local politicians.

I want to initiate a lawsuit against Monterey County and against the Pebble Beach Co. to halt construction of the conveyor belt at Spanish Bay. The dune restoration golf course is a joke, and the whole project should be stopped.

It is imperative that Carmel annex Mission Ranch and the Odello Property for public stables and for organic farms. Organic produce is unquestionably better tasting and healthful. Plots for cultivation as well as an "open artist and craft guild hall" could avail Carmel residents to social interchanges presently not available. Horses, mules, sheep and chicken could flourish and provide an invaluable link to the "Natural Kingdom." Solar power, purified water and the myriad of alternative energy sources could be explored in this region.

The opportunities exist for the betterment of all. Our quality of life is at stake in this election, while my deepest hope is in the traditional intelligence of the Carmel electorate which knows that Carmel should not become a Beverly Hills or another Pebble Beach.

Don Lampson

SINCE MY first visit to Carmel-by-the-Sea back in 1966, I've realized what a special place it is we live in. It may sound corny, but our day-to-day lives are the dreams of thousands throughout the rest of the country.

I've lived here four years. This might make me look like a greenhorn to some of the old-timers, but I believe our future is more important than our past.

Here's my view on who I would like to see as mayor, and the priorities and issues we must deal with in the next few years.

Clint Eastwood should be the next mayor. His commitment, dignity, and connections offer great potential for our town. He hasn't endorsed me, but I'm sure he'd be good to work with — although I will be nobody's "yes man."

The first thing we must do is get to know each other better. If we talk and listen to those with whom we share mutual concerns and problems, we can work together and save a lot of money on our lawyer bills.

I think becoming involved in one lawsuit after another makes us look like a bunch of crybabies, and in the long run will do us more harm than good. It's almost like the old story of the little boy who cried wolf. If the wolf ever really does show up, I don't want the people we need support from thinking, "It's just Carmel complaining again." Get the picture?

I want our city government to climb down off its high horse and treat everyone we deal with in a fair and open manner.

1. We should get some public restrooms on line as soon as possible. The city needs to help take care of this basic human need for those who walk our streets. It should have been done years ago.

2. I want a ramp built to the front door of the library so the handicapped and seniors can enter with the rest of us. We also need "real" restrooms here. Those rental outhouses make us all look bad.

3. We need more parking. I think it's time we look at some plans and prices for a parking structure at Sunset Center. I feel we should lease this project out to a private contractor so it will pay for itself, but I'm all ears for any ideas on how to finance this operation. It is a project we've needed for a long time.

There are too many issues facing us for me to discuss them all here. We're just lucky they aren't matters of life and death. However, I promise if elected that I'll listen to the people I represent with an open mind and an attitude of respect. I don't believe we have any problem that's too big to solve.

Good leadership is hard to describe, but easy to recognize. I've never run for office before, but I'm sure I can cut the mustard. If you folks put me on the council I'll do the best job I can — and you won't be sorry you voted for Don. Let's take care of some of this stuff, and try to have some fun while doing it.

Thank you for your respect and consideration. This has been a great experience for me.

Bob Fischer

IT IS TIME to sit back and reflect on what is occurring in our community. To simply state that this campaign has been lively is undoubtedly the understatement of the year.

I initially declared my candidacy a year after retirement from the Carmel Police Department. My 31 years of service to the residents of Carmel have provided me with an unusual insight into the various forms of leadership that we have had over the years. There is a great deal of difference between good government and our present "quasi-judicial" aristocracy.

It has become apparent to me that within the past few years there has been an initiated "battleground" between business and residential interests. Certain factors of city government and administration have blatantly used "scare tactics" in order to widen this supposed division. They would have you believe that huge development interests await if you simply do not return the present incumbents to office. This is simply not true. This is not a way to bring our community together as "one."

Throughout my career, I have become well acquainted with both residents and business people. The division is simply not there. My platform for strong residential influence and firm control of business interests is equally shared by all. High development interests will be thoroughly discouraged in Carmel.

What is needed is a return of government to the control of residents through an aware city council. Too many complex decisions have been made at the level of city hall and simply "rubber stamped" by the present council.

I love my community, as it used to be and for what it can still be.

I am delighted to see the number of competent candidates who have also decided that a change is sorely needed. Actual voter interest should far exceed that of our preceding election. In that election a bare 28 percent or 800 voters decided our city's future course. This indicated to me that there was a lack of interest both in the issues and the candidates. It certainly did not reflect a vote of confidence in the aspiring candidates.

Time and space does not permit me to delve into the many complex issues that face us today.

Our present city structure of government has created animosity throughout our neighboring communities through endless litigation and lack of responsiveness to other area concerns. We should be using negotiation rather than litigation as a tool of good government.

However, I must stress, in order to effect the change that is so badly needed, all incumbents must be replaced. One single new councilperson would not be able to effectively change the dilemma that we face today. I do seek your vote but equally important is that you get out and vote for the candidate of your choice. This is what democracy is all about.

Thank you for your interest.

Robert Stephenson

AS AN incumbent candidate I am willing to stand on the record of the present council, a record of both progress and containment, a record of accomplishment in those areas of importance to the continuation and enhancement of the rare charm that is Carmel-by-the-Sea.

Most of these accomplishments have been often recited, and to list them all would exceed the space allotted to me here, but let us note a few of the major items.

The Gamble property. In a neighborhood of larger homes on multiple lots a situation arose that might have resulted in 14 houses on 14 minimum lots with the consequent destruction of many significant oak trees. By a cooperative purchase and a re-drawing of the lot lines the density was reduced to eight lots and the major oak trees were saved. This was financed without the expenditure of city funds. The result is the preservation of the general character of the existing neighborhood.

The Mission Ranch. The council is negotiating to purchase this historic property for several reasons: to preserve the wetlands and meadow, to save the existing buildings, to enfold the tennis courts and pro shop into the city recreation program, and to retire the lawsuit now pending in the courts. The comments and correspondence that we have received from the residents and voters of Carmel, as well as from concerned citizens outside the city, are overwhelmingly in favor of this purchase. With that sort of support this council will continue to pursue this project.

Senior and handicapped housing. This council purchased three adjacent lots to add to the two lots which the city already owned on Dolores Street. Plans have been drawn and negotiations between the contractor and the housing authority are in progress, with construction scheduled to follow.

Restrooms in the commercial district. Plans are in progress for restrooms at Sixth Avenue and Junipero. Construction is scheduled for this summer.

Storm drainage. Engineering plans have been prepared, bids have been taken, and construction is now in progress for additional underground storm drains in the area of San Carlos, Dolores, and Fifth and Sixth avenues. The importance of this project was made evident during the recent heavy rain storms which flooded some shops in that area because surface drainage was too slow.

Recreation. For the first time in the history of Carmel a comprehensive year-around recreation program has been initiated for children and adults. The public acceptance of the various programs has been most favorable. User fees have returned approximately 85 percent of the cost. If the Mission Ranch can be acquired, the tennis courts will be incorporated into the Recreation Department.

Water conservation. The council devised and passed a water conservation ordinance that has become a model for smiliar conservation measures in Monterey and Pacific Grove. Other conservation efforts are the installation of a storage tank at the foot of Ocean Avenue to catch and hold spring water for irrigation of public planters, and installation of drip irrigation systems to replace the open spray heads for further conservation of water.

Public buildings. City hall: Its renovation, structural rehabilitation, and addition now completed and in use. Sunset Center: Phase I, mechanical and electrical renovation has been completed. Phase II, structural correction, interior remodeling, and painting are scheduled for this summer. The police building has had interior remodeling, with new radio and statewide computer communication systems installed.

These and other projects, as well as the day-to-day operation of the entire city staff, have been accomplished within our budget, and the budget is within our income. Your property taxes have not been increased, and no increases are anticipated for these or future project. The city is on solid financial ground and we intend to stay there.

With these accomplishments, and this is not a complete roster, it is illogical to call the incumbents a "do-nothing council." With the fiscal responsibility indicated it is equally misleading and untrue to say this council is "wasting the taxpayers' money."

If the residents and voters of Carmel-by-the-Sea are satisfied with the level of accomplishment and fiscal management that you have enjoyed over the past four years, I would ask for your vote for Robert Stephenson for council in the election on April 8.

Elinor Laiolo

MY POLICY as a council member would be to represent the people of Carmel-by-the-Sea. This lovely city belongs to its people and I believe the council should first work to solve problems within its boundaries. Council members must also keep informed of projects under consideration in the area surrounding Carmel-by-the-Sea and actively participate in those which affect the quality of life we know in our city.

As a resident and property owner in the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea, I have had increasing concern about the direction that the current council is taking in establishing policies for conducting the city's business.

The problems of low-cost housing for the elderly, parking and traffic circulation, additional library space and water resources and supply have been with us for a long time. Additional stairway access to our beach is overdue. Although large sums of money have been spent on consultants and litigation these problems remain unsolved. I support utilizing resouces within our one-square mile to move forward in each of the above areas with sound, sensitive solutions.

Prior to my retirement my work experience included administrative responsibility in the areas of budget, personnel, public relations and program. I now have time to use these abilities to serve our city as a council member. I am, therefore, offering 100 percent of my service to our beloved City of Carmel-by-the-Sea.

This is your city and I want to carry out the wishes and desires of the people. I am in this campaign to see that the city is given back to the people and that they have a voice on all issues that may come before the city council. Any decision in which I am involved will be made only after giving full and thorough consideration and research based on the needs of the people of this beautiful City of Carmel-by-the-Sea.

David Maradei

FOR THE PAST four years it has been my privilege to serve as a member of Carmel-by-the-Sea City Council. We have worked hard to fulfill your expectations and needs by efficient and honest public service.

The achievements of this city council have been remarkable in light of the obstacles and the problems that had to be faced.

For years many of the basic issues confronting the city had been neglected or avoided. Right from the beginning we were committed to the fulfillment of the general plan of the city and that was to be our starting point.

But first we had some housekeeping, reorganization, and recruitment to do. The old city administration was in disarray, the council was feuding and nothing was being achieved. We hired a new administrator, reorganized the city staff, and went to work.

The results of what has been done and what is scheduled for completion is left for you to judge in this coming election because I think we have resolved several long-standing community issues.

Senior housing construction is about to begin with Carmel residents given first preference as established in our contract with the housing authority.

The library annex has been approved by the Council and the Library Board.

Carmel-by-the-Sea now has a successful recreation program.

The location and construction of public restrooms has been approved.

We have enacted a general plan enabling ordinances to control the proliferation of tourist-oriented businesses.

The city administration was completely reorganized. Your city offices are computerized for efficient operation.

The public facilities of the city are being maintained regularly.

Sunset Center is being renovated.

You can be proud of your new city hall.

The importance of Phase I of the beach walkway is becoming evident with each storm that hits our beach face. We probably would have lost some portion of Scenic Road without those improvements.

Phase II of the beach walkway is scheduled to begin in the near future. This project will provide beach access as well as protect our beach bluffs from unnecessary erosion.

All this has been achieved with a budget that is averaging a 3 percent annual growth rate.

Our list of achievements is three times that long. Many of them are equally as important as those I have discussed.

The programs and projects described are not just the work of one person. It is a council working with the residents and city staff toward the achievement of one basic goal: the fulfillment of the general plan of our city.

I believe that our record proves the maturity, the intelligence, and the commitment of the council to finish the ongoing projects and to resolve the tough issues that remain.

I ask for the opportunity to work with you toward that goal in the coming four years.

Anne Woolworth

A TERM on the Carmel Planning Commission is considered the best training to serve on the city council. I have served on that commission, plus the General Plan Committee. I attend meetings of the council, planning commission, also the Coastal Commission, and CalTrans, and speak on issues affecting our treasured Carmel.

I'm for:

1) Retaining our library in its present location with an annex.

2) We must keep residentially-oriented business.

3) Limit truck delivery hours to lessen traffic problems.

4) Enforcing anti-noise ordinances.

As a 32-year resident of Carmel, I care deeply about our town's present and its future. Friends persuaded me to run for a council seat. I'll have to say that another deciding factor in my race was Councilman (Robert) Stephenson's espousal of giving up our beautiful Harrison Memorial Library at its present convenient site, and building some new edifice at Sunset Center atop a huge and costly multi-million dollar garage. He voted against the library board's plans, Jan. 14, 1986.

This despite two village-wide votes against such an unsuitable, expensive scheme. I feel

Mayoral candidates

By MICHAEL GARDNER

PAUL LAUB was bit by a dog; Clint Eastwood attended a campaign tea on Easter Sunday; Charlotte Townsend had to skip her annual two-week Baja vacation; and Tim Grady still is ridiculed by a skeptical out-of-town media.

Such is life on the Carmel mayoral campaign trail as the final hectic five days tick down to Election Day, April 8.

In late interviews with the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook, the four candidates talked about their final campaign plans, the best and worst of it, and whether they will be sworn in as mayor April 15.

What are your final campaign plans?

Eastwood: "They kind of proceed along the same lines and just doing a lot of personal contact, which is exactly what I would advocate if I'm elected to office — forge ahead.

Townsend: "I'll be happy when this is over. I plan to spend as much time as I can in front of the post office. That's going back to what I did four years ago (she defeated Barney Laiolo in 1982). As much as possible I want to talk to the people on a one-on-one basis."

Laub: "No comment...Wait and see."

Grady: "I'm continuing to canvass the neighborhoods and stand at the post office with a 'vote environmentalist' flyer and 'recall Deukmejian' placard. The primary concern is just to be here to mingle with the people. I've gotten a lot of real positive feedback."

What do you think of the media?

Eastwood: "I think it's definitely exceeded what I expected. However, I think it will disappear rapidly after the 9th no matter who wins this thing."

Townsend: "I think it's detrimental to our village and myself. It can't possibly do any good. Maybe, we can turn it into something positive. If any of it involves people in politics, especially the young people, maybe it has a positive side to it."

Laub: "I don't think of it as media mania. It has taught me a tremendous lesson in fairness and lack thereof and accuracy and lack thereof...Take CBS. They did Clint and Charlotte. An appointment was made with me and they didn't show up. They just left me out."

Grady: "They (the media) haven't represented my views. US Called me an 'unserious candidate'...They have deliberately left out 90 percent of what I've been saying. It's a reaction on their part to subdue the Environmentalist Party. They want to make us look flaky when it's a growing coalition."

How do you get away from it all?

Eastwood: "I played golf one day and skied. That's pretty much it. Other than that, I haven't been away...It has definitely been all-encompassing. Your days are pretty well lined-up for you."

Townsend: "I haven't at all. I never unplug my phone. When I do go out, perhaps for a walk on the beach, I turn my machine on...Even my work for the city has suffered. I shouldn't be a servant of the election, I should be a servant of the people."

Laub: "Saturdays I go to my place out in the Valley. I take my phone off the hook and spend a day with my family. It has reduced the amount of time I can spend with my family. I turn off the phone and spend time with my son.

Grady: "I go home for a little while, but it catches up to me. What I really do to get away is go to Big Sur and take a walk."

What is the best part of the campaign?

Eastwood: "I think the fact that the public, the neighbors in Carmel have gotten enthusiastic is the best thing. The fact that more people are participating and are interested in what's going on is the best...If we've done nothing else, we've gotten attention."

Townsend: "Increased interest in the village, actual participation, an examination of the issues. For me, personally, it's been very rewarding to see how many friends Carmel-by-the-Sea have around the world...There is an increasing awareness of how delicate the quality of life here is and how important it is to fight for it."

Laub: "I've had the most fun I've had in my life. Meeting people and being treated so nicely."

Grady: "That everyone is learning without exception. That is great and that is the very thing I'm promoting and that's consciousness and the understanding of the world."

What is the worst?

Eastwood: "It definitely puts a crimp in your personal life. You don't get as much time as you would like with your family."

Townsend: "Media attention. No, I take that back. I would like to say the changed atmosphere. The antagonism that has come to light in our village...Not saying what you mean. The spectre of greed; people who want to make money...Getting away from the atmosphere where we cherish our privacy and talk one on one, no closed doors, no unlisted telephone numbers."

Laub: "Being bitten by a dog."

Grady: The lack of seriousness on the part of the ones who have orchestrated this circus atmosphere. I find that to be a detriment to the people's understanding of the issues."

Will you win? Why?

Eastwood: "I don't know. I'll just forge ahead. I think we have as good a chance as the next person."

Townsend: "Have you ever met a candidate who said no? I'm confident that despite all of the outside pressure that the citizens of Carmel-by-the-Sea love their village and want it to continue."

Laub: "If skill and ability is the most important part, I will win. If charm is more important, Clint is going to win because frankly Clint is extremely charming and has charmed most of the people. Many people have no idea what his positions are and exactly what he will do. Nevertheless, he is charming."

Grady: "We're winning. The Environmentalist Party is winning. We will continue to gain momentum. We cannot go backward. It's a forward moving-momentum."

The Golden Years

By Myles Williams

Although loss of hearing can occur at any age, it most often happens after the age of 40. Between the ages of 45 and 54, nearly 10 percent of Americans experience some loss of hearing. This increase to about 15 percent from ages 55 to 64, goes over 25 percent from 65 to 74 and after age 75 passes 38 percent. It pays for seniors to have regular hearing examinations in order to discover problems as soon as possible.

CONSCIENCE OF CARMEL

BY GUNNAR NORBERG

Holding the line

EVER SINCE I wrote a speculative article, some couple of weeks ago, about the candidacy of Clint Eastwood, many Carmelites have wondered why I hadn't instead just taken an all-out-for-the-incumbents stand in the coming city election.

The reason why I haven't taken such a stand isn't too hard to explain. I'm just unwilling to take a blind, unquestioning support-for-the-incumbents stance. And I believe I have good and valid reasons.

Last Oct. 15, the present incumbents — the mayor and two councilmen — along with the rest of the council members, made what I called the single worst decision any city council had made in all the years since 1958. That worst decision was the breaching of a motel-control rule which had been enacted in 1958 and which not only halted then-mushrooming motel growth but also, and most importantly, had held the number of hotels-motels down to about the number they had all too quickly reached by 1958.

What I'm talking about here is the decision to approve a complete rebuilding on the Carmel Sands Motel site which will permit that motel's 42 units to be constructed on just 24,000 square feet of area, instead of reducing the 42 units to the 24 units which that 1958 motel-control regulation would have required. In the 1958 law, any such reconstruction would have specified that a 42-unit motel would have had to be sited on 42,000 square feet. Without getting into all the details about all this, the effect of the city council's Oct. 15 decision was, in effect, suddenly to require only ground-area-per-unit of 571 square feet instead of the 1,000-square-feet-per-unit which the 1958 rule would have demanded.

What does all this mean? It means that there could be demands from owners of other non-conforming 1958 motels (such as the Carmel Sands) to seek to get the same kind of economic benefit (using less land) to rebuild their excessively large number of units (excessive by those 1958 standards).

Back in 1958 there were probably a good many other motels-hotels (besides the Carmel Sands) which actually had more units (bedrooms and baths) than their land area would have permitted, but they were allowed to keep all such units in operation. However, whenever they would seek to rebuild completely from scratch, they would have had to cut back their number of units, in some cases drastically.

Because the 1958 rule had made it uneconomical to rebuild, because of the ever-increasing land costs, the city's purpose in discouraging motel-hotel growth, had been achieved.

That is why I considered Oct. 15, 1985, to have been a bad day for the future of residentially oriented Carmel — the day when the city council — surprisingly and unanimously — lifted the 1958 motel-control rule which so successfully and for so long had held the line against the once mushrooming growth of transient accommodations.

Back in August 1984 when many changes in city zoning and planning law came before the planning commission, and then the city council, that 1958 motel-control section was left out, either by mistake or by some gremlin-like intention, in what's called the Central Commercial (CC) and the Service Commercial (SC) zones where most of the 50-or-so motels and hotels are located. But this omission need not have compelled the city council to grant the Carmel Sands the kind of bonanza it did. The city planning commission had, in fact, turned down the Carmel Sands proposal by a 4-3 vote.

This breaking down of that 1958 motel-control rule when the Carmel Sands Motel request was granted last October is a big reason why I find it hard to think of supporting the re-election of two councilmen, Robert Stephenson and David Maradei, and of the mayor, Charlotte Townsend.

Meanwhile one of the councilmen who — along with me and two others — approved that 1958 motel-control law, is now council candidate Tom May, who is as sure as I am that that 1958 motel-control proviso must be promptly restored to the municipal code.

WAY BACK in the fall of 1982 — some six months after the incumbents now seeking re-election in the April 8 city election, first took office — the Carmel City Council failed to file a lawsuit against the Monterey County Board of Supervisors in a case in which the City of Carmel clearly had a good reason to go to court.

Every city in California has had for a great many years what was called a "sphere of influence." This zone extended three miles outside any city's limits, and still does so until changed in each individual city's case under provisions of what's called the Municipal Organization Art (MORGA).

The case I'm talking about concerns the whimsical unconcern of the county supervisors about rampaging construction of more and more commercial buildings in the Carmel Rancho and in the Carmel Center at the entrance to the Carmel Valley. In September 1982 there was a court-ordered moratorium supposedly in effect which was intended to halt most kinds of commercial construction — the kinds for which the county zoning administrator was blithely continuing to issue building permits. Carmel City Attorney George Brehmer had filed an appeal against the permit issued to Paul Kagan Associates, the 17th in a series of such permits which he had documented as violations of the court-ordered moratorium which, by the way, still is in effect.

After Brehmer had presented what seemed to me an airtight case, the county supervisors rubber-stamped the approval which had been given by its zoning administrator to Kagan Associates — with only one dissenting vote, that of King City's Dusan Petrovic, who often could see things Carmel's way when the others would choose not to.

Burgeoning commercial developments at the rancho and the center clearly impacts Carmel itself in many ways, besides which the two shopping centers are built in the flood plain of the Carmel River. Back in April 1958 most of the areas now occupied by big buildings were then under water in what was described as a small flood. And such a flood, or a much bigger one, could occur in any year when rainfall is heavy.

The point is often made that replies to questionnaires sent out to registered voters are used to guide Carmel's City Council. In the 1982 questionnaire, Carmel voters in the ratio of three out of every four had supported the monitoring of projects outside of the city but within the sphere of influence.

Although I and many other Carmelites urged the city council to go to court to try to stop the Kagan project, the Carmel City Council failed to act in what seemed an open-and-shut case of violation of the court-ordered moratorium then in effect. And the incumbent city council members who are now up for re-election April 8 were also in office back in the fall of 1982.

Here I would like to make a plea for the election of Ann Woolworth, who not only cares deeply about Carmel but who also does her homework, and does it well, something which could not have been said for every city council member who has sat in city hall. She was a busy member of the city planning commission and of the city's General Plan Committee.

The Candidates

that we must oppose such ignoring of the public's will.

My gratitude to the Pine Cone for letting all candidates express their views.

Robert Weber

BEING A candidate for the Carmel City Council has been a lot of fun, but all of these "news stories" are not doing The Environmentalist Party any good because of the misrepresentation and the censorship that our free speech has been subjugated to.

We decided to cancel many interviews and some debates because of the media attack on The Environmentalist Party members like myself and Timothy Grady. Michael Bogatirev started The Environmentalist Party to fight the oil companies and the insurance companies which are building hotels and golf courses in the coastal areas of Spanish Bay, Del Monte Beach and in Big Sur. The Environmentalist Party wants to make California a nuclear-free state and we want to outlaw drilling for oil on the coastline of California.

The Environmentalist Party will always have candidates running for public office and we will use lawsuits to promote the public interest to establish wildlife habitats where both native and non-native species are protected.

We want to protect our right to walk on the ground and on the sand in the dunes. The dune restoration at Spanish Bay is a hypocritical joke on "environmentalism" and we started The Environmentalist Party to purge the so-called "ecologists" who sold out to the hotel developers.

The stupid conveyor belt construction will only destroy more native pine forests and we need a lawsuit to stop its construction. The hypocritical Carmel Beach restoration project, and the stupid fence, should be cancelled. Too much money has already been wasted on the landscaping con artists who built this fence on our public land.

Devendorf Park should not be adorned with some ugly bathrooms like the ones on Carmel Beach. Devendorf Park is one of the few areas free from buildings and it should remain this way. I would simply recommend keeping the available facilities unlocked and open to the public use.

We must take a stand against the hotel developers who have taken over the water board to make us build an unnecessary new dam for more hotels. If we stop the construction of any new dams, then we will stand a good chance to fight the developers in court with lawsuits in the public interest, which is in our interest.

This situation where we must go to court to protect our lifestyles is the result of allowing unwise planning to take over the Monterey County Supervisors. We do not have to accept the legacy of these decision makers who have sold out to the hotel and to the golf course developers.

Every species of life should be studied and legalized in our zoning laws so that every species of life will have a legal habitat to live in. We are part of the environment and we were meant to walk on the earth, and not on concrete and asphalt our entire lives. We need to remove at least some of the asphalt to provide natural trails for walking and for horses. Our community can benefit from converting the Mission Ranch into a community center for organic farming and for a horse stables for public use.

It is entirely possible that the hotel developers will try to make Carmel and Carmel Valley look like the downtown area around the big ugly pink Sheraton in Monterey. Have you noticed how disgusting the Cannery Row beachfront is now? They dedicated our public beach to the foundations for these hotels-by-the-sea.

How long do you think it will take for these developers to get approval to drill for oil in front of their private hotels on our public property?

Timothy Grady and I want Carmel to take the initiative to be in the vanguard of environmentalism by stopping the Spanish Bay hotel project, and by introducing new legislation locally and throughout the state of California to outlaw nuclear power and to outlaw drilling for oil anywhere near the coastline.

Tom May

IT'S TIME to go back to basics for things that count in Carmel. Our quality of living is going downhill. People's lives are at stake on three main points than any others: choking traffic, money waste and bad government. Add water conservation as a must.

My roots in Carmel are deeper than any other candidate. My endless devotion to our residential rights and traditional village look is well known. I bring a record of public service, on and off the council, that got outstanding results. My personal style is forward thinking, fair, and decisive. My wide-ranging practical experience in money matters, negotiations, and public service will build sound, stable government respected by residents and business people alike. I do not bring short goals that conflict with social responsibility. I do tough basework to get things done.

Choking traffic is a warning signal anyone can see. Traffic growth will drive down our quality of living more than any one thing and steal our property rights and values. It eats our soul. The plain fact is that Carmel cannot handle more traffic or visitors. Parking will not work until we alter traffic growth. Local service trades will not work until we get good parking. City hall can do a lot more to bolster defenses against choking traffic through smart regional alliances. We need credible negotiators on the Council.

Money waste. Big money was squandered for the artificial monster at Piccadilly which is not used and harms our traditional natural look. High costs to remodel a city hall that has no parking or level entry do not make sense. Expensive reports by "experts" sit on the shelf. We have many more money leaks and waste. My list is long. We must get value in return for our tax dollars. We badly need money-wise people on the council.

Bad government hurts. Government is the servant, not the master. Carmel is in the service business. We need people on the Council who care about people's lives. Responsible and responsive government means:

- Personal respect for all people of whatever station or endeavor.
- Quality services in the neighborhoods and at city hall.
- Speedy response to requests and complaints.
- Checklists so people can cope with city rules to save time and money.
- Council practices that point to policy, not nitpicking.
- Shorter council meetings.
- Council decisions that earn public respect, if not agreement.

My maturity and experience will get things done through common sense in a practical way. I am decisive on:

- Rebuilding local service trades and businesses.
- Much more downtown parking and handicap spaces.
- Quality public services in every way.
- Keeping the Pebble Beach gate open.
- Annexing the Mission Ranch.
- Downtown restrooms.
- Much more senior housing.
- Quick-stop medical service center.
- Honest, predictable relations with business people.
- Good relations with our county neighbors.
- Wise use of money.

As the positive candidate in this election, I am "for" things. Together, we can set the pace in local government for years to come by cutting to the core of things that will take Carmel back to basics.

A vote for Tom May is a vote for proven substance.

Fans of photography wish Edward Weston a happy 100th birthday

By MICHAEL GARDNER

COLE WESTON is a storyteller and there's nothing he likes to do better than to spin a few tales about ol' dad, E.W.

And that's exactly what Cole did on a recent cool grey Sunday — perfect even light for photography — as he led a group of 50 E.W fans on a tour of Point Lobos, the darkroom, his own studio and then closed the evening with a candid talk about the family that included showing baby pictures.

For the uninitiated, E.W. is what his friends used to call Edward Weston, the late master photographer whose peers included Ansel Adams, Wynn Bullock, Imogen Cunningham and Edward Steichen.

E.W., who made his home in Carmel Highlands until his death in 1958, is most famous for his pepper, sea shell and nude series; and roamed Point Lobos in an era when scuba divers, fences and visitor restrictions were unheard of.

Actually, Point Lobos was in private hands during E.W's heyday, when he would pack up the 50-pound view camera with sons Brett and Cole in tow.

Today, Brett is considered one of the finest black and white photographers of his time and after living in Carmel Valley part-time has decided to move to Hawaii. Cole, who lives in Garrapata Canyon in Big Sur, has made his mark in color imagery.

Except for the purists, few discovered the importance of Weston's work — he never made more than a few hundred dollars off a print. A mint condition Pepper Number 30, perhaps his most famous work, now sells for $35- to $50,000, depending on the seller.

E.W. would have been 100 on March 24 — a milestone marked locally by numerous gallery exhibitions, including shows at the Monterey Peninsula Museum of Art, Friends of Photography, Weston Gallery and Photography West.

As part of the Monterey Peninsula Photographic Workshop series, son Cole Weston spent a Sunday In the Tripod Holes of Edward Weston along with 50 friends, family and fans.

It was 8:30 a.m. in front of Point Lobos, as workshop participants' cars stacked up outside Point Lobos, stretching north on Highway 1 behind the parked vans and trucks that arrived earlier carrying scuba divers eager for one of the coveted permits. It was a scene, no doubt, that E.W. would abhor.

While waiting for the park to open, Cole Weston, clad in his lucky white hat and carrying a copy of E.W.'s My Camera on Point Lobos chatted with the early arrivals and helped workshop director Roger Fremier organize a carpool.

Selwyn Hewitt stood patiently outside, his Leica ready. Hewitt, who came all the way from Denver for this workshop, explained, "You could call me one of Edward's biggest fans. I go way back...I emulated Edward in a sense."

Early on, Cole talked about how he and his two brothers quietly spread E.W.'s ashes off a beach at Point Lobos. "Rumor," Cole said, "has it that Wynn Bullock was watching from a hill."

Later, efforts by the family and Ansel Adams helped convince state parks to name the area "Weston Beach," but the spreading of E.W.'s ashes was kept a secret for many years.

As he began to lead the tour toward Cypress Grove, Weston, a spry man in his late 60s who can carry an 8-by-10 view camera and still hike farther and faster than many 20-year-olds, said most of his father's images cannot be captured now.

"We can't get to them anymore. We're channeled by wire fences and we can't get down to see it. There must be some way artists and photographers can get down to them," he said.

"The most beautiful things you cannot see."

E.W. usually climbed down to a scene and shot up, away from the water. Today, because of the numerous visitors, there are thin wire fences to ensure that hikers do not stray off the trails.

"You can't go to North Dome. All those great trees dad took — you can't see them anymore...The great images of my father were not taken from a path...If you want to go down to it, it will cost you $65 (per fine)."

One of the family's favorite Point Lobos areas was Whaler's Cove. The state since has removed all of the old cabins and whale skeleton. "What do they do? They put in picnic tables and johns," Weston said.

Along the path, Weston would stop and point out scenes his father would photograph along the coast. Weston would hold up the book with the image, and then explain how his father captured the photograph.

One of E.W.'s most famous tree images is 9T — most of his print titles were uncomplicated, using a simple method of "S" for snail, "T" for tree and "N" for nude.

9T is a section of a tree; an abstract form uncommon for its time, 1929.

IT WAS so abstract that people just didn't understand things like that back then," Weston said.

E.W. was a simple man when it came to his art. He had the capacity to take a simple object, like a pepper or sea shell, and create a wonderous image where none existed.

"He was not intellectual about his work at all. If it didn't move him, he didn't make the photograph," Weston said.

In those early days, pioneering photography was not a lucrative profession, Weston explained, and dad E.W. was meticulous. He didn't subscribe to the bracketing, motor-drive theory of today's photographer who uses five rolls of film for one image.

"We were poor and each sheet of film meant a lot. He had to make every shot count," Weston said.

So careful was E.W. in arranging the image that 99 percent of his photographs are not cropped.

In keeping with the day's theme, the workshop photographers "feasted" on a sparse lunch that included rye tack bread, salads, salami and wine.

Assistant Director Gail Pierce surprised Cole Weston with a cake that was decorated with a shell modeled after one of E.W.'s earliest works.

After lunch, Cole led the workshop to Weston Beach where many of E.W.'s abstract rock formations were created. At one point, Cole kneeled with the book photograph right above the rocks in the image.

"There," he said, laughing and pointing at three holes in the rock. "There's his tripod holes." Before you could take a light meter reading seven photographers surrounded Weston to get a picture of the picture with the live picture in the foreground.

Most of E.W.'s Point Lobos works were shot on gloomy overcast days that are perfect for still photographers who seek even light.

"He loved the fog. The fog is the most beautiful light. You don't have the harsh shadows. It's very luminous," Weston said.

Kodak could probably be rich just off the film shot at Point Lobos, but E.W.'s philosophy was that each photographer can bring an individuality to a scene.

That philosophy is carried on by son, Cole, who said, "I should be able to look at my feet and photograph them."

One of Weston's favorite stories about his father concerns the time E.W. was asked to shoot color, a fledgling film stock at the time.

"He sent them in and when they came back, dad said 'oh my God they came out'," Cole laughed.

BUT IT was Cole who went into color, hoping to make his mark separate from dad's legacy and the shadow of brother Brett.

Finishing up at Point Lobos, the group caravaned to Wildcat Canyon to see E.W.'s. home and darkroom, built by another son, Neil, for $1,000. Neil still lives on the property along with E.W.'s granddaughter, Jana Johnson and her family.

Then it was on to Cole Weston's studio in Garrapata Canyon, a secluded area of Big Sur about 10 miles south of Carmel.

There, Cole gave the participants a rare look at numerous E.W. images, ranging from his early romantic portraitures to his later nudes.

He also provided a glimpse of his father's humorous photographs, including one with wife Charis nude in a gas mask taken during the war years. Another nude of E.W.'s wife surrounded by common household products like toothpaste was titled What are we fighting for?.

Unfortunately for the family, financial problems forced many of E.W.'s most famous works to be sold, most for less than $75 each.

For example, Pepper Number 30 now sells for $35,000 when "the most he ever got for it was $25," Weston said of his father. "Pepper went for $2 when we were really broke...He never made more than $5,000 a year in his life."

His father was a businessman, Weston recalled, talking about the time E.W. started a "print of the month club" hoping to sell more of his images.

The family, Cole especially, has been trying to buy back many of the original images. One time Cole was bidding at an auction against someone on the telephone.

"I stopped at $6,500. I stopped and thought, oh my God what am I doing? I own the negative. I can make a print for 50 cents."

Also showing that he's a salesman, Cole brought out four "student prints" of E.W. works that are sold at half-price to workshop participants. Posters and a book also were made available.

THERE COLE unveiled the family tree through a series of slides of E.W.'s early works.

E.W. took his first photograph in 1903, at the age of 17. It was a scenic showing a path leading into a grove of trees; certainly an indication of things to come.

A later slide showed the 5-foot-5 tall E.W. holding a girl up in the air using only one arm. "My father was very athletic," Weston said. "A lot of people didn't realize it."

E.W. opened his first studio in Glendale and his initial week's gross sales totaled $1. So he sent out postcards with a photograph of a child advertising his services.

E.W. was also a "party animal" — to use today's terms, according to Weston.

"He was a great partyer. he loved to party and dress up in crazy clothes," Weston said as a slide of his dad and several others dressed in women's clothing appeared on the screen.

After shooting for Arco Steel in 1922, E.W. went to Mexico for a year only to return and try to run a commercial studio in San Francisco. "He had a terrible time," Cole said of his father's days in San Francisco.

E.W. closed up shop and headed south again for Mexico where he captured many of his famous landscapes and portraits.

In 1927, Weston relocated to Carmel and opened a studio on Ocean Avenue and Mountain View. It was here that he began to do his serious studies of shape and forms through life's most simple creations, such as the shell and pepper.

But again the studio was not successful and E.W. took to the road again, this time back to Southern California. It was in the 1930s that he met Charis, who soon became his lifetime companion and favorite model.

In 1937, E.W. was presented with a Guggenheim Fellowship and toured the west creating more than 1,500 negatives. Out of that came the book California and the West.

E.W. settled at Wildcat Canyon in 1939 and during the war years served as a spotter at Yankee Point, vigilantly watching for enemy aircraft and ships.

"He was very serious about the war. He was extremely interested. He was extremely political," Cole said.

E.W., Charis and their cats flourished at Wildcat Canyon. There is a tale that the sons held down E.W. and killed all of the cats when their numbers began to overwhelm him, now becoming slowly crippled by Parkinson's Disease.

In reality, Cole said, the sons took E.W. on a day trip and had the SPCA come and take away all but eight cats.

Cole, then a staff photographer for life, had returned to the family home to care for E.W.

Together they would explore Point Lobos, and father became teacher to son. At one shooting session Cole found a spectacular rock formation but couldn't get the image just right.

He called E.W. over, who peered through the glass and then changed the angle from horizontal to vertical. The image was one of E.W.'s favorite rock formations and he often told visitors that the photograph should be double-credited to include son, Cole.

As a slide appeared of one of E.W.'s scenics that included a cloud positioned perfectly, Cole Weston laughed and said, "I always felt he had something going with the man upstairs. The clouds were always in the right place (and) the waves were always in the right place."

Father and son would spend the foggy days shooting and evenings processing the 8-by-10 negatives. As the Parkinson's disease took its toll, Cole became the printer, following d. 1's instructions.

E.W. kept careful notes. On each negative there are notations on how to make the print, such as where to dodge and where to burn in. "PDLS" would mean, "print down, left side."

Familiar with his father's printing methods, Cole said, "Printing his work is almost as if his hands are on my hands when they're in the developer. I know him that well."

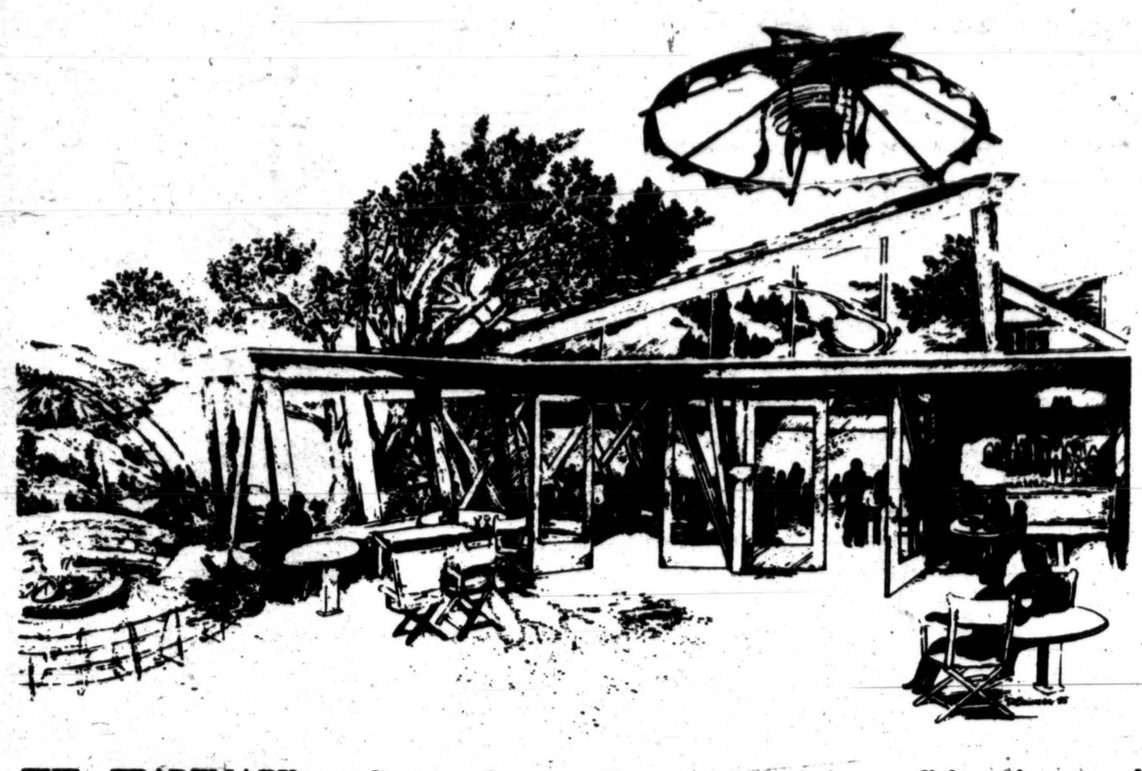
DOROTHY BOWMAN (left), an artist adept in several media whose work is featured in 54 museum and university collections, will teach a course in pen and ink drawing at Sunset Center in Carmel. Long a resident of Big Sur, Bowman is joined here by her four-year-old granddaughter, Alicia Patterson. (Anne Papineau photograph.)



THE TRADEMARK outdoor patio at Nepenthe in Big Sur is the subject of this pen and ink rendering by Dorothy Bowman. Bowman, an artist proficient in several media, was a Big Sur resident from 1958 to 1975.

Multi-media artist launches school to promote creativity

By ANNE PAPINEAU

DOROTHY BOWMAN, a Monterey Peninsula resident whose artistic journey spans decades and media, is working to establish a local school that will foster versatility in other artists.

Bowman is a grandmother who raised her six children in Big Sur.

"I was a Big Sur pioneer," she recalled. "My ex-husband, Howard Bradford, and I built one of the largest studios in Big Sur."

Family, art and building are dominant themes in Bowman's life. Her newest effort is launching The Center for Creative Development, "a window to the artist within to creative productivity."

"We're just beginning," said Bowman, executive director of the Monterey-based center. "We will offer individual development for both beginning and advanced students."

The first class to be offered through the center will be a pen and ink course at Sunset Center in Carmel. Bowman, who has also taught pen and ink at Monterey Peninsula College, will instruct the Carmel class. The four-week course will take place 9 a.m. to noon on Saturdays starting April 5. Course fee is $50.

"The classes will be informal," Bowman observed. "It's a crash course. They will be getting my personal recipe with nothing held back. A professional has shortcuts to the finished product. What education does is create those shortcuts. Students will learn to make their own cards out of pen and inks, even book illustrations."

Pen and ink is a relatively new addition to Bowman's artistic repertoire. She is also a serigrapher, oil painter and watercolorist whose works are featured in 54 museums and university collections in the United States. Her work is exhibited locally at Village Artistry and the Helen Barker Gallery.

She took up pen and ink two years ago, noting that "handwriting is almost the key to how your pen and inks will look."

THEATER REVIEW

BY JOANNE TENENBAUM

'Harvey' revival sparkles at Western Stage

THE WESTERN STAGE at Hartnell College opened a sparkling revival of Mary Chase's beloved comedy, Harvey, last weekend, featuring an invisible rabbit whose magical powers, mischievousness, and sheer size (six feet, one and a half inches) handily upstaged the Easter Bunny.

Harvey has been stunningly produced with spiffy, realistic sets, flawless lighting and sound management, and costumes appropriate to 1944, the time in which the action takes place in "a city in the far west." The action happens against a backdrop of comfortable respectability and confident bourgeois values, economically expressed in the staid old-fashioned drawing room of the Dowds, with its cushy leather sofa, handsomely framed family photographs, and a plethora of silver candlesticks on the mantlepiece. It is a room unused to surprises.

Into this complacent setting wanders Elwood P. Dowd (Hal Peiken), a bachelor in his late 40s whose easy charm and pleasantness are matched only by his quiet nonconformity to the values of his time and place. In a world in which women seek to rise in society through the apt choice of a good catch and men are expected to make something of themselves, Elwood P. Dowd is a dropout. The inheritor of the family estate, Dowd does not work. He does not even pretend to. Instead, he spends his time having drinks in various places, from bars to firehouses, on an endless round of social "occasions."

There is one other little thing. Dowd is accompanied, almost everywhere he goes, by an invisible rabbit who is more real to him than his sister, Veta, his niece, Myrtle Mae, or the overstuffed leather sofa in the drawing room. But that's not the problem. The problem, at least in the eyes of Veta Louise, is that Dowd fails to recognize the social unacceptability of such a companion. Veta thinks Harvey, like ring around the collar, ought to be unmentionable, to put it extremely mildly.

So when Dowd turns up, rabbit in tow, at Veta Louise's ladies' tea and confidently begins introducing Harvey around, Veta decides that Dowd's eccentricity is a social embarrassment too great to bear. Her teenaged daughter's social life is at stake, and Veta, whose comfortable position in the Dowd household derives from her brother's generosity, makes a hard decision. The rabbit must go, and Elwood with him, to a sanatorium.

But putting Elwood away turns out to be less simple than Veta thought it would be, and the ensuing fast paced comedy of errors, laced with Harvey's pranks and Dowd's gentle

A plea for reason

VETA (PAT HORSLEY) pleads with her brother, Elwood (Hal Peiken) to give up his "friendship" with Harvey, the invisible rabbit. Harvey continues at The Western Stage, 156 Homestead Ave. in Salinas. For reservations or information, call 375-2111 or 758-1221.

philosophy, is sheer delight, from its savvy satire on the shortcomings of shrinks to its good humored asides at the sacred cows of respectability. ("Your average man," muses Judge Gaffney, "looking up and seeing a big white rabbit, would do something about it. Not Elwood. He's had that rabbit in my office many's the time."

Peiken's Dowd dances on the fine line between reality and fantasy, selectively ignoring every rudeness (except impoliteness to a lady) and insistently focusing on the pleasant. His kindness and charm are irresistible, and his spell is a persuasive one. The reality of the rabbit, always invisible, is never in dispute.

As Veta Louise, Pat Horsely is manic, flustered, and very funny. In business and gesture, her personality is mirrored in that of her experience-hungry daughter (Pennie Nichols). Veta's hysterical personality is balanced off by the commonsense style of Judge Gaffney, played by Rollie Dick with a hunted look that hints at his secret belief in Elwood's highly improbable invisible friend.

Moray Koontz's performance as Betty Chumley, beleagured wife of the famous psychiatrist to whom Veta entrusts Elwood, makes an incredible entrance and paints a satirical picture of psychiatry with unusual economy. She sidles into her husband's sanatorium, unable to meet anyone's eye, making a little sound, and fights her way out of her coat. Digging into a very small handbag for a cigarette, she spills out a dozen prescription bottles. Koontz's brief scene is worth the price of admission all by itself.

As a taxi driver, Keith Underwood likewise creates a lively and convincing character in record time, and Jeff Peiken's Wilson, the unsavory sanatorium orderly, is played with energy and conviction.

Harvey is impeccably directed by Harvey Landa, with sophisticated scene blocking and clockwork timing that contribute mightily to the success of the piece. Throughout the evening, Dowd and Harvey wander through proper rooms unsettling proper people in the most delightful ways. Never once does Dowd drop his gracious, bemused style.

"I wrestled with reality for 40 years," he explains at one point. "And I'm happy to state I have finally won out over it."

Australian-born Charles Smith

Carmelite sets his sites on achieving in the arts

GEOGRAPHICALLY AND psychologically speaking, Charles Smith has travelled a lot of turf.

He holds degrees in electrical engineering, business administration and a doctorate in psychology. He is also a self-described psychic, poet and actor.

Smith's accent betrays a childhood spent "down under." He grew up in Melbourne, Australia and spent much of his business life in Sydney. And at an age when many people are looking for ways to slow down a bit, this Carmel resident hopes to crack the great wall of show business.

"I think of myself as a writer/actor. I think of myself as having the potential to do what Charles Chaplin did, although not in the same field," Smith observed. "He was a genius who could make you cry and laugh and cry and laugh. That's where I want to get. I believe I have all those attributes."

When questioned as to the probability of achieving his lofty goals, Smith stands steadfast. His gaze is direct, his attitude forthright. "I do not accept other people's fears," is Smith's response.

Smith had an opportunity to test his acting mettle during the recent run of Veronica's Room at Carmel's Studio Theatre/Restaurant. In that play he was able to "play myself, my father and another man I impersonated. I could feel the energy of the audience."

"I want to be successful on Broadway," Smith stated. "I want to be successful in films. I want to write successful performance material."

As a means to that end Smith has already begun coursework in the fields of writing and acting. Through the San Francisco School of Dramatic Art, he took "Singing for the Terrified." He devoted four years to writing a book on psychosomatic medicine and found the experience so challenging that he continues to put pen to paper.

"I thought writing should be fun. I took a course in creative writing to discover if there is any fun in writing. I think performance poetry is going to change and I want to change it. People want to have the rhythm of music in poetry. I don't want it to be discordant. Generally people think of poetry as unemotional and I want people who read my poetry to go through emotional gambits."

Smith has resided in the United States since 1974. "It felt like home and I stayed," he said.

He has lived in Carmel since February 1985. "Carmel is physically attractive — all the trees and the ocean. It's easy to get around. I don't drive a car. I like being outdoors. It's the freedom. Freedom and peace go together."

Peace is a recurring theme in Smith's inward script. Whereas he maintains his roster of artistic goals, his chief aspiration is to be "absolutely at peace with myself. I will only see nice things around me. I will not see anything in another person to upset me because there will be nothing in another person to project except peace."

A former engineer and marketing manager in his native Australia, Smith now diligently cultivates spiritual peace. He has found his own formula for success.

CARMELITE CHARLES SMITH has pursued many interests, from electrical engineering to psychosomatic medicine to poetry. He has now set his sites on acting and writing.

"I think of negative thoughts I've had about others and then I look to see how I have that trait and I ask that person to forgive me that I had that negative thought. I then forgive myself for having it in my system."

Smith is quick to add, "It works."

The actor/poet/author also avails himself of the many recreational opportunities that exist on the Monterey Peninsula. Besides walking, rather than driving from place to place, Smith is also a yachtsman, tennis player, equestrian, swimmer and surfer.

"I've body surfed here — I body surfed when we had that hot break. But I don't actually surf here. I don't have a wetsuit."

Through it all, Smith maintains that this is his time to shine in the spotlight.

"I just have this feeling in my system I'm going to do it," he stated. "It's the law of the universe. It's never been a goal earlier because I had other things to do."

Restoration of antiquities in China to be addressed

The public is invited to attend the Tuesday, April 8 meeting of the Oriental Art Society of the Monterey Peninsula in the community room of The Crossroads, Carmel. Col. Gregg L. McKee, chairman of the society, will present the slide-illustrated talk.

Those attending will also see a videotape of the ongoing reconstruction of the Great Mosque in Xian, China. The tape was filmed during the April visit by members of the Monterey Peninsula Museum of Art. The video coverage includes incorporation into the structure of massive timbers which were said to have been procured in California. The present columns of the Temple of Heaven in Beijing are also said to have come from the U.S. West Coast.

Col. McKee has visited China frequently and is a student of Chinese art, ceramics, history and culture. He spent the months of April and November in China. He and Mrs. McKee led the April expedition to China for members of the Monterey Peninsula Museum of Art. That itinerary focused on Chinese art, architecture, archaeology and ceramics. His next Asian trip is now being arranged for the fall of 1987, the moderate temperature season in Southeast Asia.

That trip will visit the Buddhist pilgrimage sites of Borobudur on Java, Lopburi and Chiangmai in Thailand, Mandalay and Pagan in Burma, and if possible by then, the ruins of Angkor Wat in Cambodia. From Burma the group will fly to Yunnan Province, China, thence to Chongqing for the cruise down the Yangtze to be followed by visits to Xian and five days in Henan Province, the very heart of ancient, classical China. The trip will bypass both Hong Kong and Beijing, but will visit Singapore, Bali, Bangkok, Rangoon, Shanghai and Tokyo.

St. Dunstan's sponsors rummage sale

'Murder by Death' screened

A stellar cast populates Murder by Death, the Tuesday, April 8 installment in the Alec Guinness Film Festival.

Peter Sellers, Peter Falk, Maggie Smith and Truman Capote join Guinness in this 1976 murder-mystery. The film will be shown at 8 p.m. in Sunset Theater, San Carlos at Ninth, Carmel. Admission is $2.50. For details, call 624-3996.

Carmel pen and ink class launches school for creative development

Bowman prefers to use fine point felt tip pens for her drawings that include detailed renderings of Nepenthe and The Phoenix at Big Sur. The drawings reflect settings with which is Bowman is well acquainted. She was a Big Sur resident from 1958 to 1975.

"The late Lolly Fassett of Nepenthe told me you could create a wonderful home for your children in Big Sur," she said.

With her former husband Bowman built a home and studio on Partington Ridge.

"The home grew like our children. It had six bedrooms."

From that isolated base both husband and wife were able to market their artwork around the world. A Big Sur fixture herself, Bowman counted among her friends the late author Henry Miller.

"He was a charming, delightful man who didn't like wierdos knocking on his door," she recalled. "I used to cook for him and he'd turn people away. He was an intellectual — a cultured man who loved literature and painting. He couldn't cook and he needed someone to cook for him. Whoever came in the door was nominated. He was also a primitive painter who did watercolors. When he got hungry he'd sell watercolors to people for $5 or $15."

Bowman's six children attended local schools, from Captain Cooper through Carmel High.

"I'm known as a pioneer," she quipped.

Her memories of raising a family in that isolated community remain upbeat.

"It was a delight. Every two weeks we came into town to shop. We'd just fill our car with food. We had so many kids people didn't like to be behind us in the supermarket line. All six of my children are artists or musicians. Even my mechanic turned into an artist."

Bowman recalls some Hollywood hullabaloo that invaded Big Sur in the mid-1960s. Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor were in town for the filming of The Sandpiper, a love story set against the wave-swept cliffs of Big Sur.

The production crew visited her home to try to "gain the feel of a typical Big Sur home."

Her artwork, then exhibited at the Coast Gallery in Big Sur, was used in The Sandpiper, as were drawings by her eldest son, Rock Bradford.

During a film crew party at Nepenthe, Bowman encountered Richard Burton, whose face, she recalled, looked "like a rubber mask of Richard Burton."

Bowman still finds new expression for her artistic spirit.

"I was an abstract expressionist and I'm more of a realist now."

The pen and ink class, she said, will be followed by courses in painting, print making, computer graphics, poetry, fiction writing, book binding, self-publishing and individual art therapy.

To register for the Carmel series, call Sunset Center, 624-3996; or Dorothy Bowman, 375-5170.

Camerata Singers perform classic songs of spring

'SONGS OF SPRING through the Centuries" and "In Windsor Forest" will be performed by the Camerata Singers of Monterey County on Sunday, April 6.

The concert will begin at 3 p.m. in the Santa Catalina School Auditorium, Mark Thomas Drive in Monterey.

The spring-inspired repertoire consists of music from the Renaissance, 16th century, the Romantic era, 19th century, Contemporary era and the 20th century. From the 16th century the Camerata Singers have selected three Italian madrigals and two French chansons. Five 16th century English dances will be played by Corliss Myers, soprano recorder; Pauline Cantin, alto recorder; Jo Ann La Torra, tenor recorder and Herbert Myers, bass recorder.

Spring music of the 19th century will be represented by compositions of Robert Schumann and Johannes Brahms. The 20th century pieces are by Carl Parrish, Domingo Santa Cruz, Paul Hindemith, Claude Debussy and Maurice Ravel.

Also to be performed is Ralph Vaughan Williams' "In Windsor Forest," a cantata for mixed voices adapted from the opera "Sir John in Love." The opera is based on Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor which tells of that fat old rogue, Sir John Falstaff, who tries to seduce both Mistress Page and Mistress Ford and is foiled by them.

Soloists for "In Windsor Forest" are Juliette Williams and Mary Ballengee, sopranos. For Maurice Ravel's "Trois Oiseaux du Paradis" soloists are Rachel Dadap, soprano; Brenda Almeida, alto; Leon Olson, tenor; and Edward Ballengee.

The Camerata Singers were organized in 1980 by Vahe Aslanian to provide opportunities for experienced singers to perform in Monterey, Santa Cruz and San Benito counties. In his 30-year career at Hartnell College in Salinas, Aslanian served as professor of music, director of the Hartnell College Choir, Chamber Singers, the Hartnell-Community Chorus, and Founder-Director of the Hartnell College Conservatory of Music. He has continued his work as a conductor and lecturer.

Tickets for Sunday's concert are $6 for adults and $3 for students. Tickets can be purchased at the door or in advance by calling 624-4598 or 663-3342 (evenings). The concert will be repeated at 4 p.m. Sunday, April 13 at St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Pajaro and San Miguel streets, Salinas.

Loyola University choruses appear in Carmel

The 1986 chorus tour of the Loyola Marymount University Choruses highlights programs of music by four ensembles. The choruses are under the direction of conductor and clinician Paul Salamunovich, professor of music.

Unique to these tours over the past several years is the fact that the 75 touring choristers with their conductor present a kaleidoscope of choral music offered by the men's chorus, the women's chorus, the mixed consort singers and the combined groups.

Similarly the repertoire includes a variety of music sacred and secular, serious and popular, from medieval chant to Renaissance polyphony, Baroque concertato motets, through music of the Classical, Romantic and Modern eras.

The LMU Choruses will present a concert at 7:45 p.m. Friday, April 4 in the Carmel Mission Basilica. Admission is free. Donations will be accepted. The concert is sponsored by the Monterey Bay Chapter of the Sierra Club.

WOLVES OF THE CROW is among the works by Bev Doolittle that will be showcased at GWS Galleries in Carmel. The artist will be present during a reception 1 to 6 p.m. Saturday, April 5. Other featured paintings will include Two Indian Horses, The Forest Has Eyes and Pintos, as well as new paintings she is preparing specifically for this show. GWS Galleries is at 26390 Carmel Rancho Lane, at the entrance to the Barnyard, Carmel. For details, call 625-2288.

Doolittle's camouflage art conceals hidden meanings

A ONE-WOMAN show of the works of Bev Doolittle will be punctuated by an artist's reception from 1 to 6 p.m. Saturday, April 5 at GWS Galleries in Carmel. The collection will include original paintings, her first book and fine art prints.

Camouflage art, the style of painting for which Doolittle has earned acclaim, is the art of painting two stories or messages into a single scene. Most often, the true subject of the painting is disguised, not at all obvious at first viewing. Although her style is sharp and realistic, the overall effect is often abstract.

"Once I have the concept, I attempt to convey it through strong design coupled with detailed realism," she explained.

Also featured at the Doolittle show will be her first book, Where Silence Speaks: The Art of Bev Doolittle, created after the fashion of the great French art books. Known variously as "la edition de luxe," "le livre de luxe," "les livres des artistes" and "le livre de peintre," these books were works of art in themselves and were often left unbound.

In Where Silence Speaks, individual images are reproduced in eight colors on fine paper. The sheets are folded, with the image lithographed on the inside right-hand page; inserted into each folio is a sheet of parchment paper printed with text by the author, Elise Maclay. Then, the unbound pages are fitted to a handmade portfolio which is lined with a ribbon-tied chemise and housed in a gold-stamped case. Each book of this very limited edition is individually inspected then signed and numbered by Bev Doolittle.

Born and raised in San Gabriel, Bev Doolittle grew up wanting to be an artist and was encouraged to do so from an early age. She graduated from the Art Center College of Design in 1968 and for the next five years, she and her husband were members of the creative team of a large Los Angeles advertising agency. Deciding to forego lucrative salaries in favor of artistic exploration and proximity to nature, they left the agency and the city and moved to Joshua Tree (about 130 miles east of Los Angeles) where they live today.

The move to Joshua Tree sparked Doolittle's exploration of her talent for camouflage and Western art. She was signed exclusively by The Greenwich Workshop after they saw her painting, Pintos, which became her first print published by The Greenwich Workshop. As has been the rule ever since, that first edition sold out quickly, bringing her into the national spotlight.

Doolittle's work is part of the IBM Corporate Collection in Tuscon, Ariz. and the Favell Museum of Western Art and Indian Artifacts in Klamath Falls, Ore. In addition, she has exhibited with the National Watercolor Society, twice in the American Watercolor Society Annual Show, and she has been invited by the National Academy of Western Art to exhibit as a guest artist at the Cowboy Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City.

Beva Farmer originals shown at Carmel Art Association gallery

A dozen works by Beva Farmer will be exhibited in the Graphics Room at the Carmel Art Association through May 7. Farmer's exhibit of serigraphs, acrylic and gouache works exemplify a skillful diversity of techniques and styles. Inspired by nature, the graphic artist has specialized in calligraphy and serigraphy. Her goal is to communicate, through her art, gentle messages regarding relationship and commitment with others, God and nature.

"I have been inspired," said Farmer, "by the images in the Bible and the Divine Comedy; by the concepts of Jungian psychology and by the lovely things I see through the lens of my camera."

Beva Farmer has been a member of CAA since 1984. Her private art studies began in 1947 and locally she has participated in classes given by George De Groat, Peter Pilat and Nancy Johnson. In a written biographical statement she shares, "The shapes of things and the spaces in between and surrounding those things are important to me. And color — solid, pure, intense, strong. I love it!"

Her activities during the past four decades include her duties as wife to the Rev. Peter Farmer who has ministered in Marin County, the West Indies and Carmel Valley prior to his appointment as chaplain at York School. As a teacher, she helped found and develop All Saints' Episcopal Day school, has taught adult school programs in peninsula school districts and in northern California, Texas and Oregon.

Solo art exhibits, competitive awards and book designing and publishing preceded her tenure as head of the York School art department from 1978 through 1982.

The Carmel Art Association is located on Dolores Street near Sixth Avenue and is open daily. For more information call 624-6176.

Spring poetry readings planned at Cherry Hall

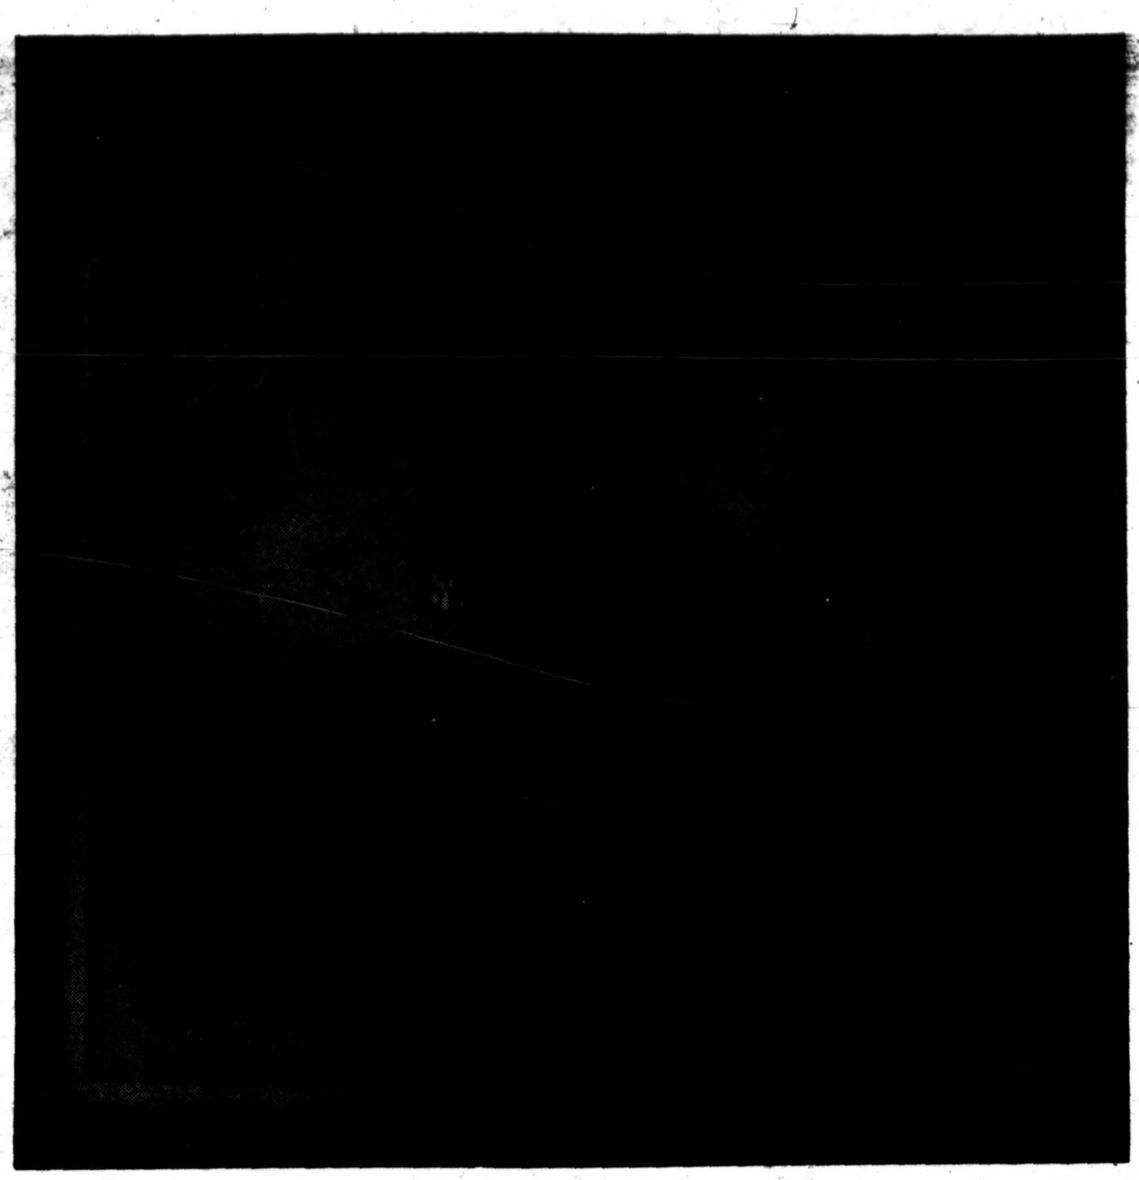
Starting Sunday, April 6, the Carl Cherry Foundation will present three spring poetry readings scheduled for the first Sundays of April, May and June. Each program will begin at 2 p.m. in Cherry Hall, Guadalupe and Fourth, Carmel.

Beginning the series will be Mary Krainik of Monterey, a freelance writer perhaps best known for her humorous articles. She is an assistant with Poetry Shell and her poetry has appeared in that publication and the Monterey Peninsula Herald. The format for each program of the series will be a reading by the day's featured poet followed by an opportunity for other poets to read their work.

On Sunday, May 4, Dennis McGilvray, a young poet who has read previously at the Cherry Foundation, will be featured. Father Michael Miller, pastor of the Sacred Heart Church, Hollister, will be the featured poet on Sunday, June 1.

For more information call the Cherry Foundation at 624-7491.



THE WATERCOLORS of David Scott Meier are the subject of a one-man show at Village Artistry in Carmel. An opening reception is planned from 4 to 7 p.m. Saturday, April 5. For exhibit details, call 624-3448.

David Scott Meier watercolors to be exhibited

Native Californian David Scott Meier's watercolors are featured in an exhibition at the Village Artistry gallery, opened Saturday, April 5.

An artist of distinctly individual imagination and skill, David Scott Meier is known for paintings that intrigue their audiences. His watercolor technique, sometimes on hand-embossed paper, is unlike any other. Like pages torn from illuminated manuscripts, his work depicts a special world of fauna, flora and sympathetic angels shimmering with joy.

Now residing in Laguna Beach, he once operated a studio and gallery in Mendocino. During the past four years the artist has had showings outside of his studio, including the Bechtel International Center at Stanford University.

He has also executed many commissions for publication and for private collections. These have been diverse in their subject matter. Themes of animal preservation, stories from the Old Testament, classical myths and Aesop's fables have all been interpreted by the artist. Each painting is embellished with the intricate, detailed brushwork that is his hallmark.

The exhibit will open with a reception from 4 to 7 p.m. Saturday, April 5, at the Village Artistry gallery on Dolores between Ocean and Seventh, Carmel. The show will continue through April 19. For information call 624-3448.

Voter fraud allegations heat up city election

CLINT EASTWOOD spoke after Mayor Charlotte Townsend presented her views. (Holly McFarland photo.)

TWENTY cases of "questionable" voter registrations were found by a probe of the League of Women Voters of the Monterey Peninsula, President Lorita Fisher announced Tuesday night.

The independent survey also uncovered another 15 registrations that "bear further investigation," she reported.

The 35 registrations will be turned over to the Monterey County Elections Office for investigation, Fisher added.

The cases mostly involve allegations of voters registered at their place of business, Fisher said. No names were released.

Because of "limited woman power" the league just surveyed the approximately 400 latest voter registrations, Fisher added.

About 90 voter registration cards were checked for authenticity, she said.

In addition to the 35 turned over to the county elections office, Fisher said another 35 registrations were "unverifiable." Those will not be turned over to the elections office.

Mayor Charlotte Townsend, in an 8:30 p.m. press conference at the foot of city hall Tuesday, said that the results should not have any bearing on the election.

The mayor made it clear that she had "absolutely nothing" to do with the investigation.

Eastwood also attended the press conference and once again called for the league to release names saying, "we deserve to know."

He read a section of the elections code that indicated it is a misdeamenor for someone to make "groundless" challenges that could "intimidate" a voter.

"These are just cautions," Eastwood said. "We should be proud of the fact that we have such a high registration."

In the six weeks of new voter registration for this April 8 election — the deadline was March 10 — there were more than 450 registrations processed. Of that, 355 are new voters and the other approximately 100 were existing voters who just made changes to their registrations.

MAYOR CHARLOTTE Townsend does not think the voter registration inquiry should have an impact on the election. (Holly McFarland photo.)

PFEIFFER POINT on the BIG SUR COASTLINE

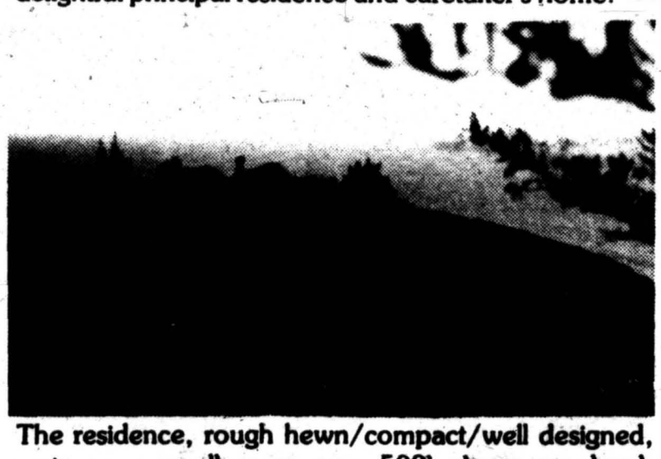
Pfeiffer Point, a famous landmark on our Pacific Coastline, projects between Sycamore Canyon, leading west to exciting Pfeiffer Beach, at upper right in above photo, and Wreck Beach, on its south. In pioneer days, much travel to Big Sur was accomplished by coastal ships outloading passengers by small boats to Pfeiffer Beach. Persons then travelled inland via Sycamore Canyon. Off Wreck Beach, often many fishing and sailing boats anchor in the lee of Pfeiffer Point. This rare Big Sur retreat rests along its crest, and comprises an imcomparable 19 acres with delightful principal residence and caretaker's home.



The residence, rough hewn/compact/well designed, rests on a small mesa over 500' above sea level, overlooking a portion of Los Padres National Forest, surrounding Pfeiffer Beach. Pleasant decks, the hot tub commanding a 70 mile view down the coast, cypress groves, lawns and gardens, all add to an exciting Big Sur lifestyle. Below, and to the south, is the caretaker's home (or guest house) reached by a separate road, affording seclusion to both residences.

The main residence comprises 800 square feet, including a living room, kitchen, bedroom, bath and sleeping loft. The massive raised-hearth, stone fireplace is the focal point of the living room, providing cheerful warmth. The caretaker home, also of about 800 sq. ft. has a living room, kitchen and bath on the first floor; the sleeping loft above opens onto the living area below. A huge stone fireplace rises in the center of the house. Both structures are well served with utilities and access roads.

This remarkable property enjoys one of the most spectacular settings along the entire western edge of our continent. Its location on Pfeiffer Point, pictured near center of above photo, overlooks the two Forest Service ridges westward and above Pfeiffer Beach and is readily accessible to the heart of Big Sur and the Scenic Highway. Price is $675,000. Please contact Hank Adams or Linda Mazet in our Coast Properties Division for further details.
